ABOUT YOUR FAVORITE PEOPLE!

STARS THAT HEAT UP THE HEADLINES

These are people who provide grist for the mills of gossip, news and speculation. These popular personalities are headliners in more ways than the theatrical...

LIZ CRITICALLY

JULY 24, 1961
Paris, July 23.—I lunched with Darryl Zanuck, who hasn't looked so well in ten years. He swore he turned to town for one day just to see me, but I expect foul weather on that yacht of his might have something to do with it. Susan and her two children were aboard with him. ILL — SINKING!

Report from Rome

Rome, July 23— Back home, in the United States where Bricktop was born, the Negro singer and nightclub entertainer isn't very well known. But in Rome, Paris and London, she's as well known as any movie star because she's been over here since 1924. Her nightclub here is jammed nightly. When they are passing club here you'll find in her audience Maurice Chevalier, Bing Crosby, Freda C. DeKnight, here for the Paris showings. "I knew your dad when he was just starting in show business," she told young Chris. "Tell him that Bricktop often thinks of him and the rest of the bunch." Then she got up on floor and sang Porter's "Love for Sale." Said Cab's daughter, admiringly: "She's a knockout."

SAMMY DAVIS & MAY BRITT

ALTHOUGH MIXED MARRIAGES, both religious and racial, are becoming more and more common in this country they still are newsworthy events, particularly when one of the parties involved is a celebrity. When, as in the case of Swedish born actress May Britt and Sammy Davis Jr., both bride and groom are constantly in the public eye the marriage is almost sure to stir a great deal of interest.

May and Sammy are more fortunate than some. They seem to have the support and well wishes of their many friends in Hollywood and throughout the world in addition to the stolid approval of the marriage by May's parents. As Miss Britt pointed out when she was interviewed by Mike

May and Sammy enjoy themselves at wedding of Nancy Sinatra and singer Tommy Sands...

Wallace, interracial marriages are accepted quite readily in Europe and especially in Sweden where there is nothing out of the ordinary. It is only in America, she added, that eyebrows are automatically raised.

May was "given away" at her wedding by her father (her parents flew in from Stockholm for the marriage), who in halting English made it quite clear that he was happy to see his daughter married to the man she loved.

Sammy and May became very proud parents recently. Miss Britt will continue to act if she is able to find parts that please her . . . but there is no doubt about her being quite happy with her role as Mrs. Sammy Davis Jr. •

JACK PAAR

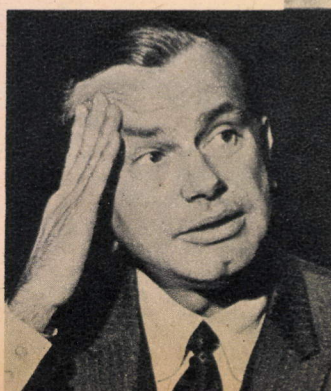

TV COMEDIAN JACK PAAR could have a twenty volume scrapbook of clippings describing his various bouts with networks, writers, newspaper columnists, and other entertainment personalities.

One of the biggest flare-ups between entertainers ever to be recorded by the press were the battles between Ed Sullivan and Jack Paar. Sullivan declared war when he challenged Paar's right to pay guests a mere $320 when Sullivan, on CBS, was forced to pay the same people thousands! Sullivan maintained that if a star wanted to appear on the Paar show just to chat that was one thing. If he did the same routine for the lower fee on NBC that he did on CBS for six or ten times as much loot, Ed would have nothing to do with him in the future.

Debates were scheduled and broken . . . Jack said that Sullivan backed down and Sullivan said the same of Paar. The differences between them seemed insoluble and in the meantime show business split into two camps. As a consequence there are Sullivan-ites and Paar-ites (or as Walter Winchell puts it, "Paar-isites") and at least for the time being it looks as if the twain never shall meet. •

Jack Paar and his loyal better-half.

Nicolas, son of Brigitte and husband Jacques Charrier, was born in January.

B.B. and her handsome husband Jacques . live in the fashionable 16th. arrondissement of Paris. •

Brigitte, wearing dark glasses and a scarf around her head, leaves Nice clinic where she had been treated after suicide attempt earlier in week.

BRIGITTE BARDOT

Brigitte Bardot, mother, actress, attempts suicide!

IN THE FINAL ANALYSIS A marriage, even if it entails special difficulties, is a happy occasion. To many people, and justifiably so, it is the happiest occasion of their lives. A wedding marks the beginning of a hope-filled optimistic time, a time for plans and dreams of present and future. The story we are about to reveal is just the opposite. It is a tale of despair and fatalism . . . for these are the feelings that precipitate a suicide attempt, at least they did in this case.

Brigitte Bardot, France's "Sex Kitten," left Paris for a rest. One reason for her going was low blood pressure and the advice of her doctor. The other, say her intimates, was the difficulty she was having with her second husband and fourth great love, Jacques Charrier.

Jacques' jealous fits made headlines before, but this time they ended in violence. Jacques saw Brigitte emerging from a Left Bank night spot with her current leading man and the brawl began.

Later the actress went to visit friends in another part of the country and seemed, during lunch at least, to be in fairly good spirits. She then disappeared for an hour or so and her hostess, Miss Simon, became concerned. Aided by the gardener, Miss Simon found Miss Bardot stretched out near a well on their property. Her wrists were superficially slashed and she had swallowed a vial of sleeping pills.

A local doctor administered first aid and tried to revive the actress who was then rushed to a hospital. After caring for her through the night her doctor released a statement saying that she was in fair physical condition but that he was terribly fearful for her mind. He reported her to be in a state of depression that was disturbing to behold, particularly in one so young and beautiful.

On her way to the hospital the star repeatedly entreated those who were transporting her to just let her die. She also referred to her child, the offspring of her marriage to Charrier, saying that her mother could care for him if she didn't pull through.

Miss Bardot comes from a wealthy respected French family. Her parents

It looked like a swinging love triangle but turned out to be square!

IF BRIGITTE'S TITLE TO THE CROWN of "Sex Kitten Of The World" can be challenged by anyone, the gal for the job is Hollywood's Marilyn Monroe. And indeed M.M. has been heating up her own share of headline on this side of the Atlantic. Her story belongs to herself and others, for she has also been linked in recent news with the new acting rage Yves Montand.

Ever since Marilyn and Yves co-starred in "Let's Make Love" the rumors began to fly. And when the public heard of Marilyn's divorce from Arthur Miller the whispers of a love affair between Marilyn and Yves really fanned the already roaring flame.

But reporters were unsuccessful in their search for the real story behind all the talk. They interviewed Simone Signoret and Yves to find out if there was any connection between the so-called affair and Marilyn's divorce. At one time the actor had said that Marilyn had a schoolgirl crush on him but later denied it. In regard to Marilyn and Arthur, Yves expressed sympathy that "such nice people" were breaking up and maintained that he was sure he had nothing to do with it.

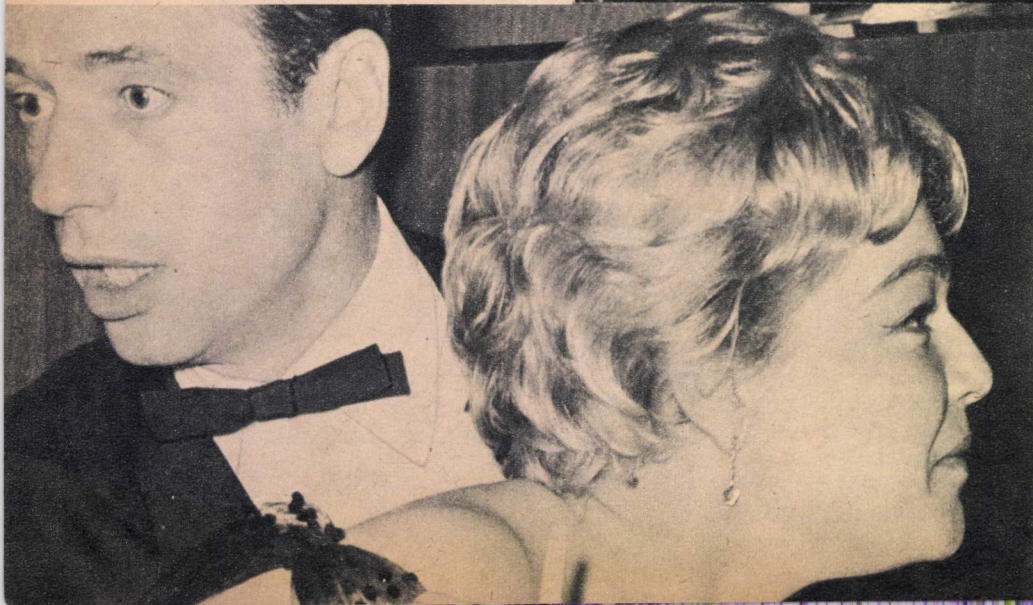

Having exhausted this source, reporters contacted Simone Signoret Yves' wife in France. She said that if Marilyn was in love with Yves she "showed very good taste". Simon asserted that she too was in love with the Frenchman. She refused to comment when reporters asked if the friendship between Marilyn and Yves and the resulting publicity had placed a strain on her relationship with her husband.

Beautiful actress divorces her third husband and tongues wag.

LANA TURNER AND CHERYL CRANE

Murder of Johnny Stompanato termed justifiable homicide by courts!

NOT ONLY THE STARS THEMSELVES, but sometimes their children, make headlines. This was true in the instance of Lana Turner's daughter Cheryl Crane. Cheryl's "problems" first came to the public eye in 1958 when the press covered her fatal stabbing of underworld character Johnny Stompanato, one of her mother, Lana Turner's, lovers. Cheryl, then sixteen, stabbed Stompanato to death with a kitchen knife because he was "going to hurt" her mother, she told police.

Her crime was termed justifiable homicide by the courts but ever since Cheryl Crane has been making headlines from time to time. First when she was sent away to El Retiro, a school for delinquent girls, later when she ran away from the school, and still another time when Cheryl and two other girls from the school were arrested for drinking while they were on probation. •

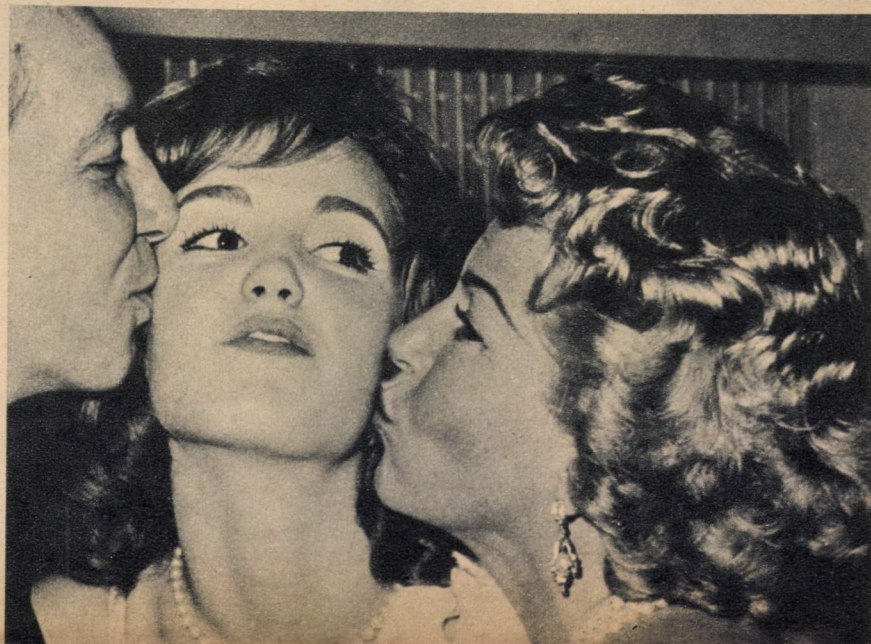

Lana Turner, Cheryl's mother, cries at her daughter's hearing. Cheryl fatally stabbed Johnny Stompanato, Lana's lover, with a kitchen knife.

Pretty Cheryl Crane could have career in show business if she managed to stay out of trouble long enough to get started . . .

Parents' kiss reassures daughter of their unflinching love . . .

Not a day goes by without a mention in leading papers of Fisher, Taylor, and Reynolds.

ACTRESS DEBBIE REYNOLDS has provided movie writers with many a juicy tid-bit. The actress first made headlines when as "the girl next door" she married the handsome and popular singing star, Eddie Fisher. The marriage was considered ideal and consequently, when their divorce plans were announced, movie goers went wild. Debbie, who claimed that she still loved her husband became a tremendously sympathetic figure and Eddie came in for some hard knocks. Liz Taylor also was the recipient of much bad publicity.

Once again Debbie came into the limelight, this time for marrying shoe tycoon Harry Karl. In the meantime Liz and Eddie's doings were very closely covered. Their marriage might well have taken place in a fishbowl for all the privacy they received. Predictions as to whether or not they would be happy circulated like hot cakes . . . and still are. Liz' near fatal illness kept this triangle in the spotlight, and now Eddie Fisher's spectacular singing comeback is making news. •

DANA

Read This Puzzling Story: How a Record Changed Dana's Life!

CARVER DANA ANDREWS HAS HAD A LIFE marked with tragedy and triumph. His drinking bouts have hit headlines for quite a few years, as have his various differences with studios. The one he'll never forget happened when a $159,769 damage suit was slapped against him by his bosses who asserted he was too intoxicated to work during the filming of one of their movies.

When Andrews heard about it, he told reporters, "I deny all charges.

It's ridiculous and childish. It's a conflict of personalities."

The studio went on to claim they had to stop shooting the flicker at least 20 times on Mexican locations because Dana was too looped to work. They asked the court to free them from his contract of $100,000 for ten weeks of work.

The son of a minister, Andrew's behavior has always been somewhat less than quiet. His taste for the grape landed him behind bars several times, the last when he was cited for drunk driving and fined $250.

Dana wasn't always the boozier he became for a while, . . . in the thirties when he skyrocketed to stardom, he was a hard worker. When his first wife died in 1935 things changed. But now things have changed again—he no longer needs the alcoholic crutch. He is the old Andrews. No one knows why. If you ask him, he simply smiles.

What was it that brought him back? He won't admit it, but his family background may have something to do with it—his family background plus a very strange happening.

We've investigated, back to the time he gave up the juice, and we have established a connection with another story—Dana, out of the blue, approached the Epic Record Company with an idea and they gave him the green light to record the Bible in a dramatic record called, "And God Said." In the album he recounts tales of faith, provides narration for gospel singing, and generally simplifies beautifully the Biblical parables.

Is it possible that this record (a best seller, by the way) brought back memories of his early life with his Baptist minister father and the religious atmosphere he was weaned in and made him see the error of his ways?

There is the evidence; he stopped when he began the record . . . you be the judge!

FRANK

Headlines scream daily with news of the all-powerful "Sinatra Clan . . ."

IN THE REAL "GASSER" or blockbuster category no one stands out more than Frank Sinatra. The power of his famed "Clan," a tight in-group of Hollywood personalities, can not be exaggerated. Not a day goes by when the Clan activities aren't in the leading papers. And their sphere of influence is not limited to Hollywood. Frank's activities as clan leader run from organizing a benefit gala performance for Jack Kennedy and the Democratic Party which was expected to gross over a million dollars to being lord high protector for his friends.

Hollywood is one place where beauty is business!

BEAUTY

Problems of the Stars

Singer Peggy Lee is one of the many women in this world who is constantly plagued by a weight problem. And what is more this tribulation is one that is borne by almost every woman in Peggy's family. Her "solution," however, is not the usual one. Peggy has finally decided, after a life-long battle of the bulge, to stop making herself and those around her miserable by crash-dieting. She is just going to eat moderately.

"Freckles are always cute on a child," says Doris Day "but they are not always convenient for an actress who is playing a sophisticated part." With the advances that have been made in the make-up art, however, this problem is easily remedied. Nancy Kwan also has freckles—just a sprinkling over her nose. Her method of dealing with them is to leave them completely alone. Nancy uses little or no make-up, lipstick at night.

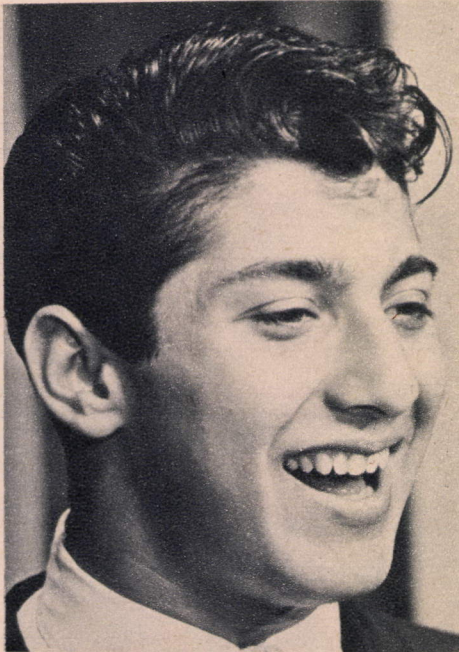

And you can't always attain it by "doin' whut cums natcherly!"

"I dote on cake, love ice cream, chocolate is ecstasy," Juliet Prowse told our reporter. Then she added "and I'm always dieting!" No matter how thin Juliet gets, however, her face always retains its round shape. Her remedy for this problem is to use a darker base for shadows along the jaw and white chin make-up during filmings. This gives her chin a more pointy look.

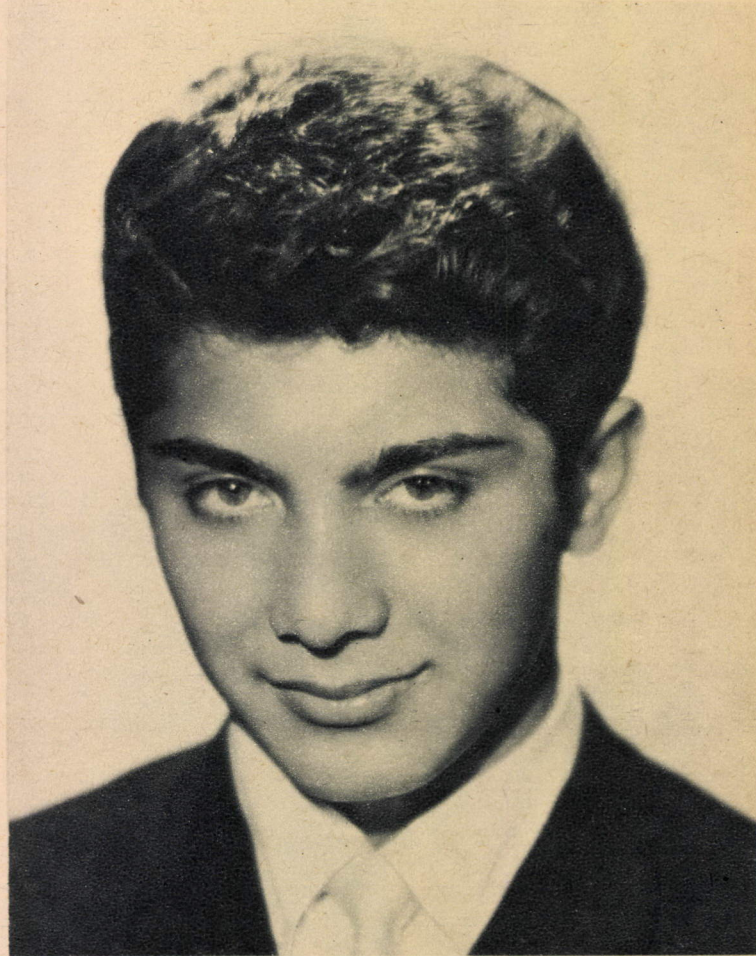

In Hollywood the man as well as the woman have beauty problems

NOSE JOBS

Above: Singer Paul Anka before he had his nose re-modeled. Right: Paul had little to say about this operation. Said that it was performed to remedy sinus trouble and not for aesthetic effects. Our reporter asked him if he thought the surgery had changed his career. Reply: "Not at all," the young vocalist replied.

Left: Cute little Annette Funicello looking pert in new hat for summer beach going. Candid was snapped before Annette changed noses. In the above photo you see Annette "after." Like it? Paul Anka didn't. Singer Anka said that he liked Annette better before!

Some try remedies; others decide to live with imperfections.

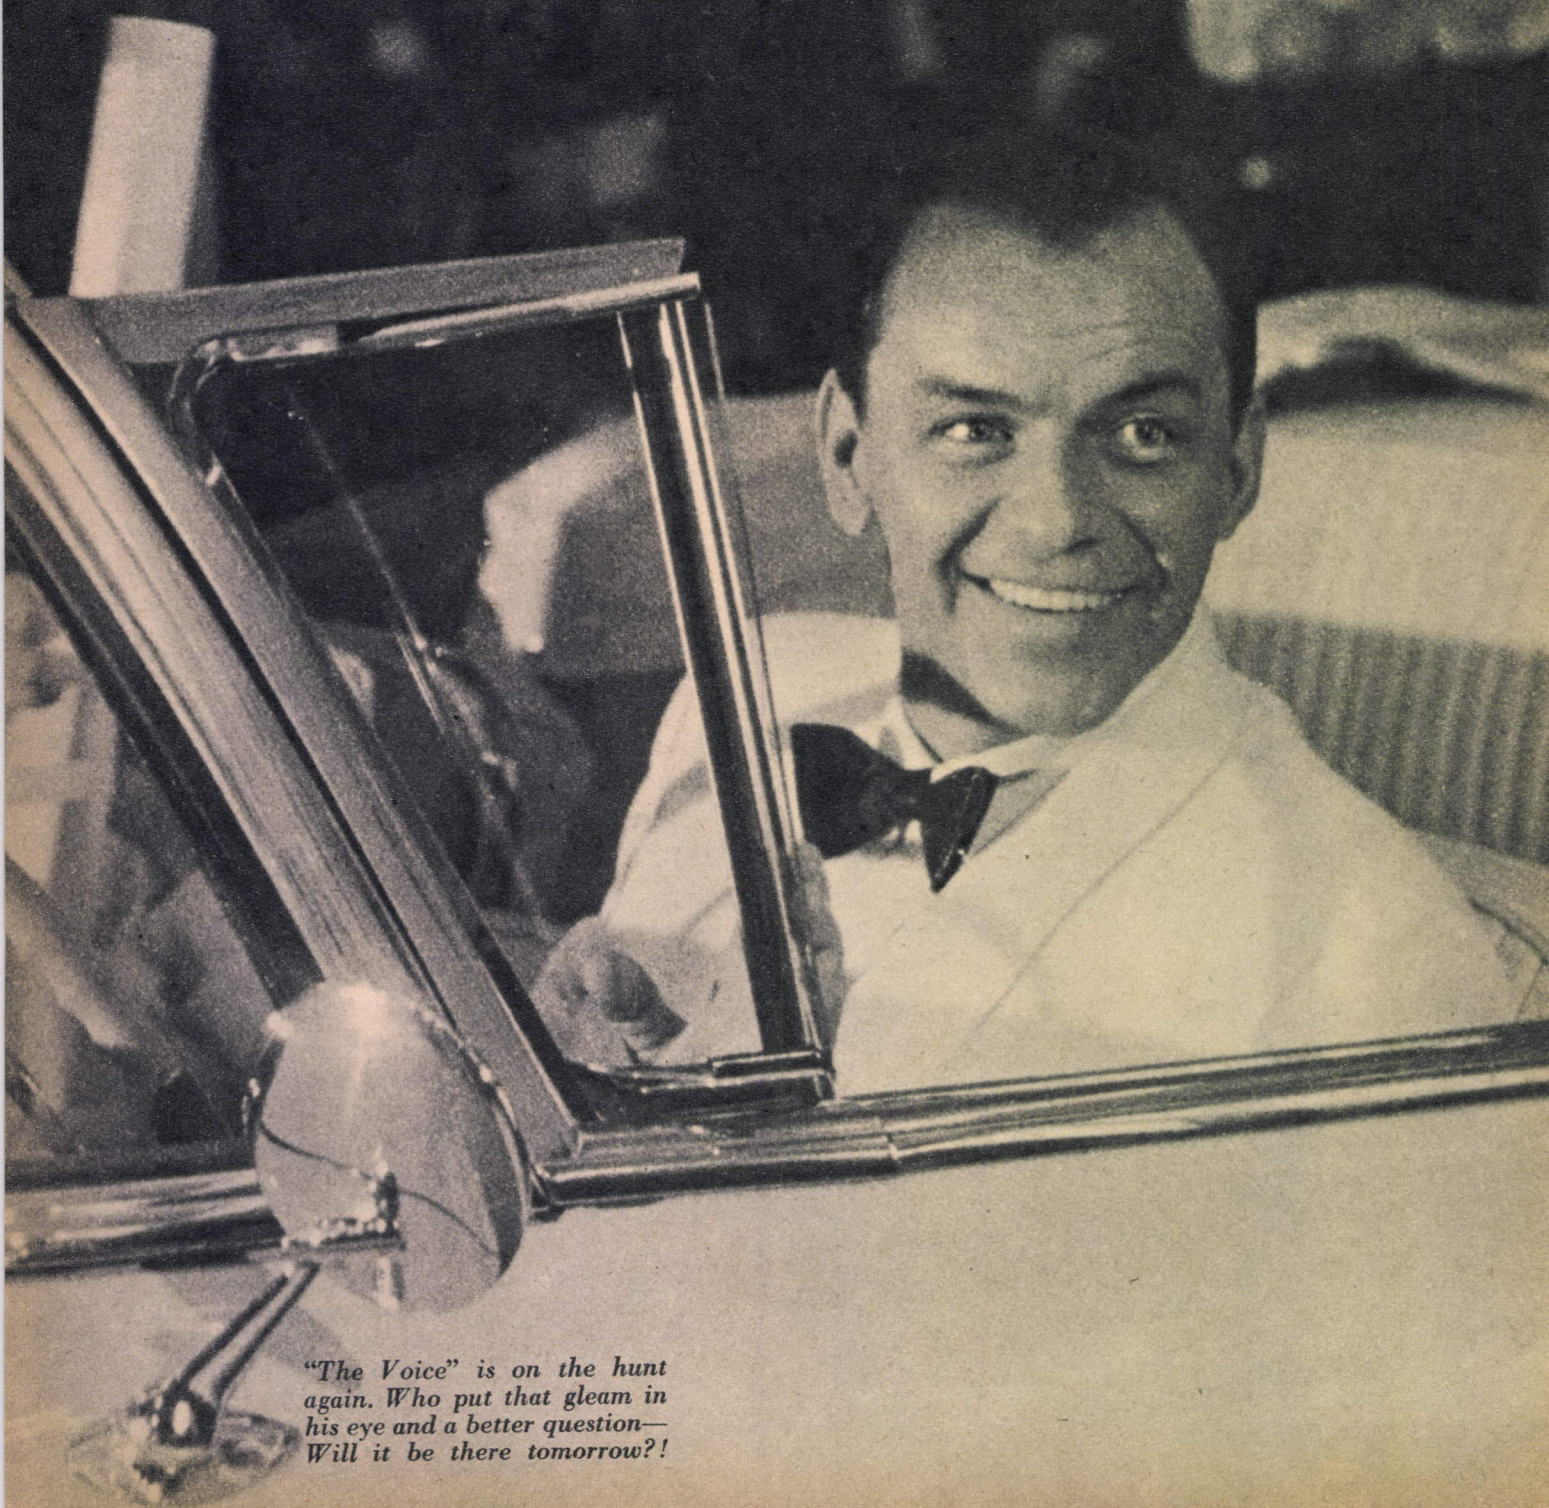

Neil Sedaka and Connie Francis usually try to avoid candids like this one! Both have slight nose problems and keep their better sides to the camera. It seems however that even so, they are attractive to their fans.

Beautiful Italian actress Sophia Loren has a beauty problem that she artfully conceals...a slightly full mouth. The actress carefully pencils her lip line and doesn't carry color all the way to the corners. Sometimes she uses a darker shade on lower lip.

WOLVES

Hollywood's Most Wanted Men: They Don' Wan'

"The Voice" is on the hunt again. Who put that gleam in his eye and a better question—Will it be there tomorrow?!

ON THE

To Get Married!

PROWL

Marlon Brando is one of Hollywood's off-beat hunters — because his taste runs to the exotic. No names, please . . .

THE BIG CAR SCREAMED AROUND THE CORNER, with more than its usual zip. The old gleam was back in its driver's eye and his brows were arched with interest! Frank Sinatra, one of Hollywood's most sought-after "wolves," was on the prowl again. Who was the woman that day? Well, it doesn't much matter. Tomorrow there will probably be another.

If there's one thing that Hollywood's single women can't complain about it's a man shortage. Movie-town is chockful of eligible bachelors who come in just about any size, shape, or form, each having his own particular charms. But getting and keeping one of these men-about-town may present real problems, even to an enterprising young starlet.

They all have broken hearts to their credit and the tally keeps climbing higher by the day! Who are these men, what makes them tick, why are they so devastatingly successful with women, and who are the damsels who have fallen the hardest?

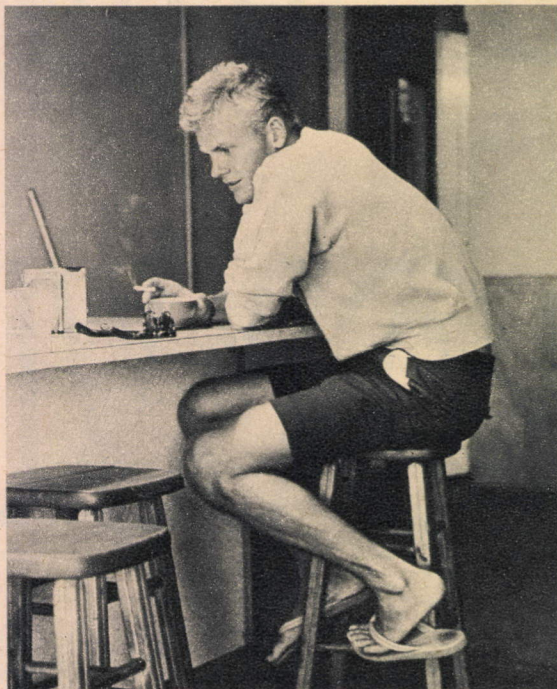

Elvis Presley and Juliet Prowse: this wolf may have met his match and if Juliet gets busy there will be little prowling for El.

At the time that we are writing this the wolves are out howling, but take heart — at any time the tender trap may spring.....

Another Hollywood male who seems to be particularly allergic to rice and old shoes is Hugh O'Brian. He is far from being allergic to women, however; or they to him. Hugh, without losing his rugged masculinity, knows that the right word at the right moment can go a long way and he is attentive to and appreciative of details from the color of her dress to the sparkle in her eye. Hugh enjoys variety — and his freedom, but Princess Saroya may have some other ideas on the subject.

Nobody can really predict how Glenn Ford's "wolf" career will go. Glenn was married to Eleanor Powell from 1943 to 1960. He is most frequently seen with young Hope Lange, but Hollywood, look out! With his combination of boyish charm and suave manner this actor could have the female population at his feet. •

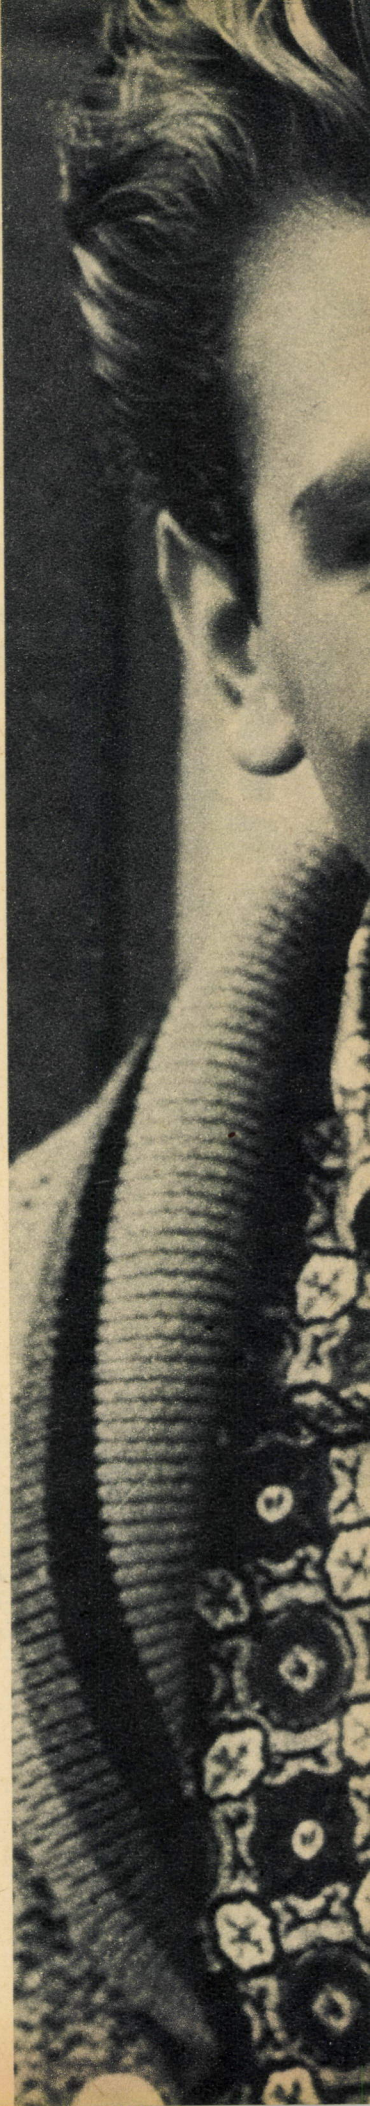

When Tab Hunter isn't horsing around in his own stable he is seen around town with some of the most beautiful women in all Filmville.

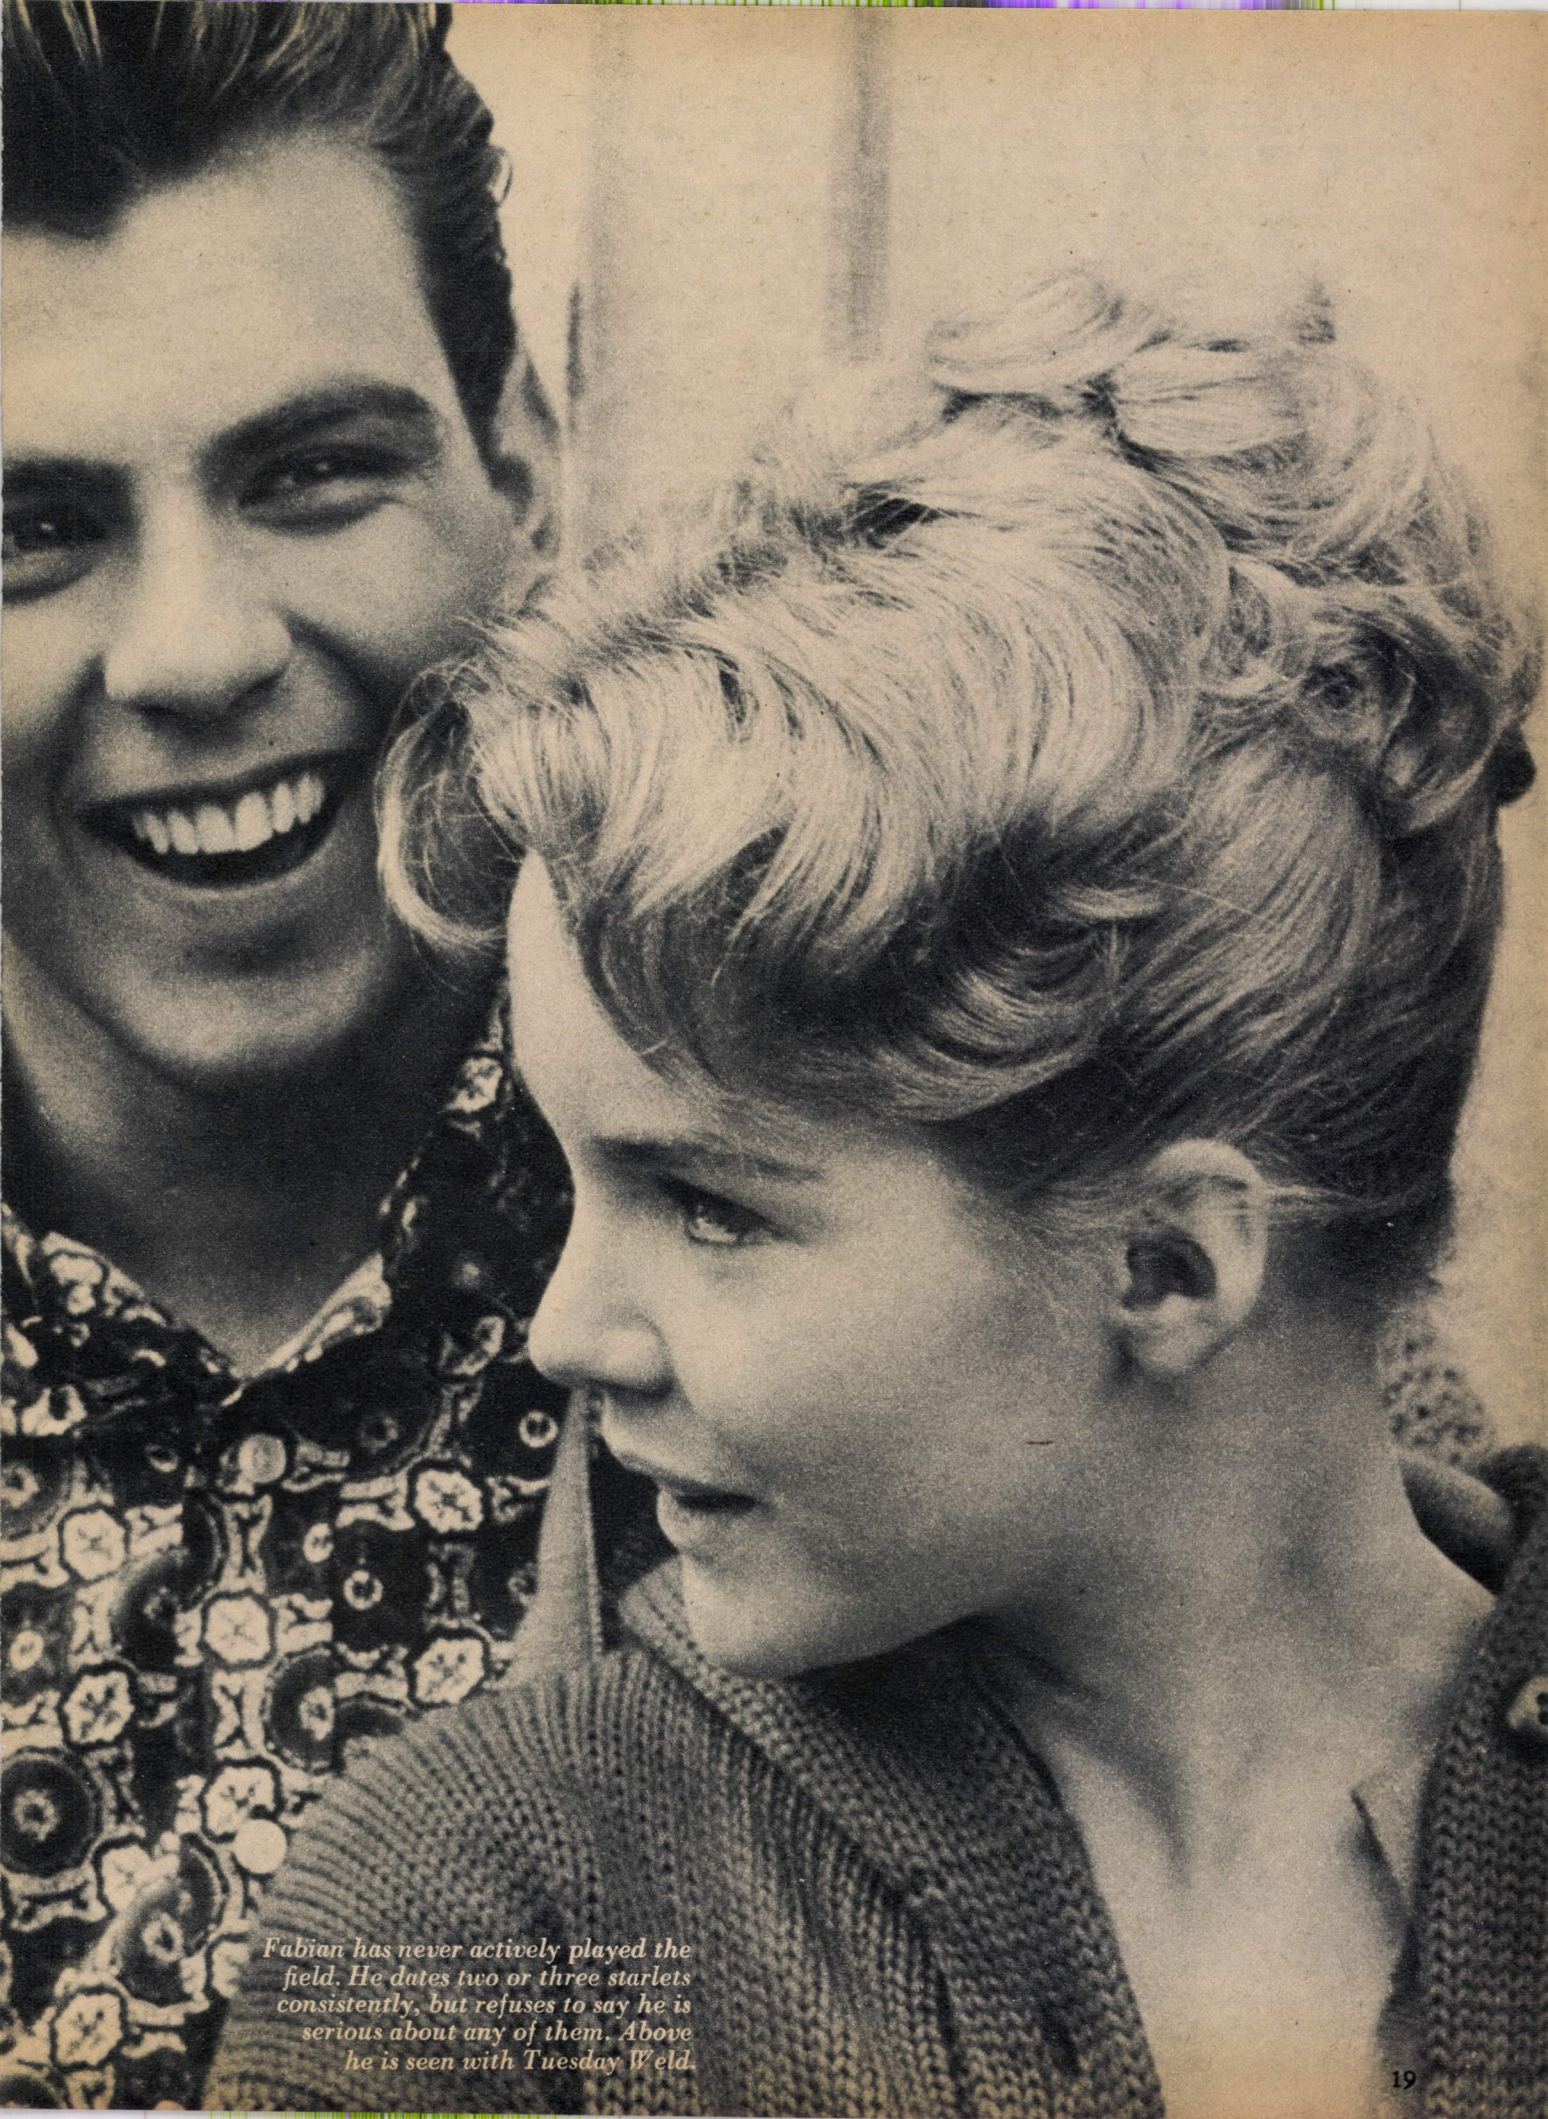

One wolf has met his match. There will be no more of this for Troy Donahue. He'll have to say goodbye to pretty Sally Todd now that he's engaged to Lili Kardell.

From the intent look on Marianne Gaba's face, Sal Mineo's appeal is as strong in the water as it is on land. Swimming, anyone?

Fabian has never actively played the field. He dates two or three starlets consistently, but refuses to say he is serious about any of them. Above he is seen with Tuesday Weld.

WOLVES ON THE PROWL

talent, but some of you gals may be glad to know that the tables are being turned. Instead of keeping cool it looks as if Elvis has got a problem or two (or three??) on his hands these days.

Just when it looked as if Elvis had really flipped for Juliet Prowse, Tuesday Weld began showing up in the strangest places — and with none other than Elvis! He's a good catch and a fast runner, but if Juliet puts on her racing shoes there may soon be one less eligible in Movietown.

And speaking of lovely Juliet Prowse, what has Frank Sinatra been up to these days? What makes this man, who is not conventionally handsome or physically rugged, a modern day Casanova? His women, those who have loved him and lost, refuse to talk. He has some strange fascination for women that is not easily described. His magnetism keeps them flocking to his movies while in his personal life even the women he left are still loyal to him.

Loyalty is not one of the most prominent female characteristics, according to Rock Hudson's experience. When Rock married his manager's secretary, Phyllis Gates, he thought it was for real, but after a six-month absence (Rock was working on a film) Phyllis handed him his hat. It will take a smart woman to convince Rock Hudson that the fair sex is worth the trouble. Until then he'll go it alone.

Far from having a playboy attitude towards women and love Edd Byrnes waxes serious and thoughtful when the subject comes up. He takes his acting career very much to heart and though he admits that he is very fond of Asa Maynor, more than any other girl, marriage is not in his immediate future.

These are just a few of Hollywood's, perhaps the world's most wanted men. The line-up goes on almost forever. There's the still "teen-age" actor Sal Mineo, who has that old-world charm and a lively wit. He has flipped over all types at one time or another — tall, cute, and cuddly, sophisticated and chic. But he's not going to tie himself down.

Hollywood's blond Adonis Troy Donahue, is unusually intelligent and intense. He earned the reputation of being "Movieville's Number 1 wolf" and even his kid sister couldn't help agreeing. He was so definitely out of the marriage market that it was funny even to think of it. If what his ex's said was true his women had to watch out! Where there's smoke there is usually fire and the signals read "fickle and restless" for Troy! But what about Lili Kardell?

Elvis Presley has been rocking the female population for the past few years with his looks and

They say the song is over, but it looks to us like at least the melody lingers on. One of our reporters saw Mamie Van Doren and Edd Byrnes together just two weeks ago.

Cary Grant is all smiles as he continues to rack up impressive totals with the legions of Girlsville.

Glenn Ford's boyish charms are still with him. Really flips the femmes!

Left: Ex-Queen Saroya and actor Hugh O'Brian leave New York Club. Above: That's Shelley Winters in the Rock's arms, but get no ideas! They are best of friends and Rock is proud to have it that way.

Teen-age idol Ricky Nelson's appeal isn't limited to American women. Above, he receives an enthusiastic aloha from Hawaiian beauty.

George Hamilton may be trapped or so they say. Susan Kohner's been steady for a long time.

Sandra, shown here with her mother, may or may not have her baby by the time you read this. Will all her hopes, dreams, come true?

Sandra's mother is a great help to her while she's waiting for new arrival. She helps her pick out clothes.

THE CHILD

SOMETIME IN DECEMBER SANDRA DEE and Bobby Darin hope to be blessed with a baby. Sandra knows how her husband lived, how he had to literally punch himself up to the top. How he lived in poor neighborhoods, didn't eat or dress as well as the others. How hard it was to get an education and work after school. How, even though he wanted to go to college, he wasn't able because of the family's financial circumstances.

"I don't want that kind of baby. I want my baby not to have to fight for anything. I want my boy or girl to always have all a child should have, and not to have to fight for their rights.

"I know what fighting all his life did to Bobby. He walked around for years with a chip on his shoulder. Each time someone did something nice for him he asked the same question—'what's their angle.'

"Since, my husband has learned that people do nice things without angles, that just because they give you something is not a sign that they want something in return.

"He's lucky. Many boys and girls never learn that—they never have the chance.

"My heart goes out to them and to the many babies that will be born who will have to fight their way to the top. I hope every one of them win."

HOW TO GET INVITED TO A HOLLYWOOD “WILD PARTY!”

Harry Karl and Debbie Reynolds as they portrayed “Queen Diamond Lilly” and “King Rudagigwa” at a colorful Mardi Gras Ball.

PEOPLE HAVE ASKED IF THERE ARE STILL ANY WILD PARTIES IN MOVIE TOWN, and if so, how they can crash them.

It's simple. If you are a starlet and searching for fame simply latch on to an agent who knows everyone. Then sit in his office and picket outside; you'll see celebrities enough to make your head whirl. "Accidentally" bump into one and you are all set if you can take the ball from there.

One starlet told me that she met a he-man western actor that way and before she could say "pardon me," she was — invited, that is.

She was sure that this was to be an innocent get-together and she'd have an opportunity to meet some "big people." She did and she was shocked. The "big people" there busily smooching each other and each other's wives, smoking "tea," and undressing as they jumped into a pool.

"I never knew that Hollywood was like this," the disappointed girl said: "I thought those days were finished and nothing wild ever happened any more."

How wrong she is!

Actually, outwardly, Hollywood is a pretty tame, sometime dull town. Years ago, there were fist fights, unexplained deaths, scandalous doings galore. But what really shook the town were the publicized parties stars used to hold. The late Lionel Atwill, a movie villain, was one of the actors who tossed shindigs they whispered about for years. A few of his soirees felt the long arm of the law when police raided the too-hot doings.

But Atwill wasn't the only party-giver they talked about. Many of the top stars of years ago used to have get-togethers that made Atwill's seem like chapters out of Grimm's fairy tales.

Comedian Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's career was shattered when he abused pretty Virginia Rappe, a beautiful young aspiring actress, and the papers headlined his disgrace and her subsequent death from being sexually manhandled.

Then there were the wild ones radio tycoon Atwater Kent used to invite the movie elite to at his lavish castle-like home.

Left: Connie Stevens wears the whiskers... Her clean-shaven escort is Gary Vinson. The really "wild" Hollywood soirées now are held behind locked doors, and are seldom publicized...

"Those were the good old days," some columnists say. "Those were the times when Hollywood really worked hard and played harder. The last fifteen years things are lily white and the great party-givers and their parties are a thing of the past.

But are they? Not at all!

Ever since 1947 party-givers have locked doors, but the good times are still going strong. Those were the days when Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel, Hollywood sportman and man about the mob used to play Elsa Maxwell with his voluptuous girl friend, Virginia Hill. However, they say that the dean of Good Timesville was the late Errol Flynn. They trace his party-giving tendencies way back to '42, when he encountered a cute 17-year-old Betty Hansen at one of these parties. Errol took her "upstairs for a nap," when she looked peaked.

Miss Hansen said he had other things on his mind: "He undressed me," she said, "and then he got undressed... all except his shoes... and he..."

Later, Errol tossed his famed wing ding on board his yacht, "The Sirocco," and his party this time only had two people present — the great lover and lovely 16-year-old Peggy Satterlee. That one really scorched the tabloids when Peggy told all.

There are still others who claim that the first to lock all doors was Robert Mitchum when he had a get-together in Laurel Canyon, where the locks didn't hold well. They couldn't have, for police found the rugged actor cozying up to a quantity of marijuana in the company of a group, including Robin Ford, Lila Leeds, Vicky Evans. Bob cooled his heels in the clink for sixty days for this one!

Then there was the story about teen-age idol Frankie Avalon, who was, as papers put it, "picked up by cops for alleged hotel room irregularities with some young girls."

This all happened in Milwaukee not long ago, and vice squad police grabbed Avalon and his manager, Rick Petrone, for violating the city's curfew laws and warned them to stop doing what they appeared to be doing.

Then there are the "parties" Dana Andrews used to have with himself and the company of bottles containing assorted redevye. Dana's only trouble was trying to mix the stuff with gasoline. Jason Robards also tried that and wound up where Andrews did — in the clink.

Scott Brady screamed he was innocent of the dope charges papers tacked on him, according to intimates; he was only a spectator at the party.

Anita Ekberg attended a locked door party in Rome and the door was battered down by the polizia and Ekberg hit headlines for stripping down to the bare essentials when she was carried away by bongos and the wild dance another party gal was doing.

Perry Mason couldn't do much for the District Attorney, Ham Burger, played by William Talman, on his show, when Bill was grabbed on a morals charge. Police allegedly claimed that the joint was jumping with nude girls and marijuana. The only thing Bill got out of it was — fired. But later, the show's producer relented due to public pressure, and hired him back for occasional appearances.

No, sir! Hollywood hasn't given up those wild parties; they're just being more careful now! •

Sherry Jackson sports a costume that is reminiscent of the "good old days" when Movietown parties were rough and ready.

These doings are only scandalous at first glance. That's Ty Hardin with none other than wife — Andra Martin!

T.V. gave them

These actors hit their stride with a bang when they latched on to guns, mounted their trusty steeds, and went out in pursuit of baddies

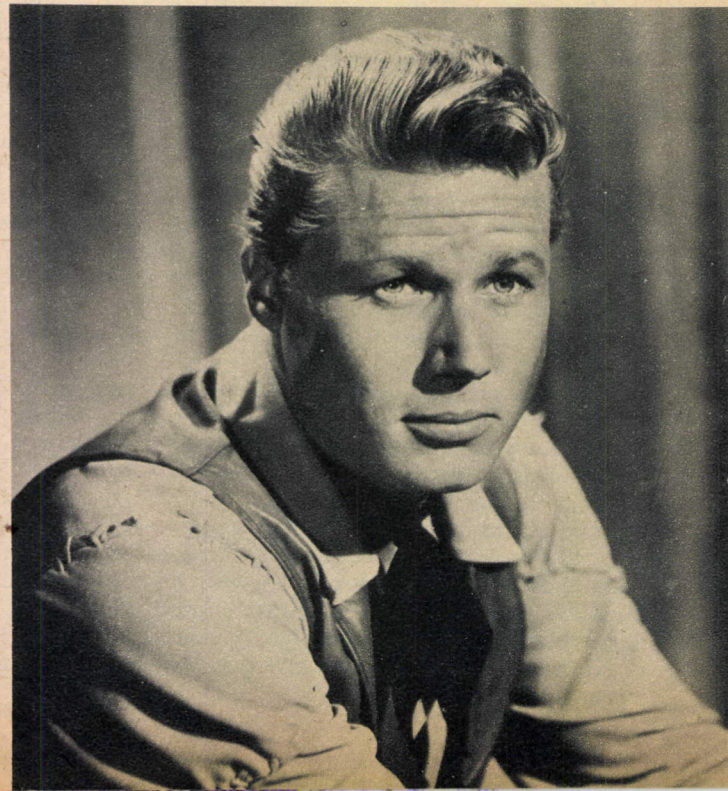

DALE ROBERTSON

He got his start in flickers as the hero of dozens of movies dealing with adventure in the far north, intrigue in Ireland, and cloak and dagger stuff in the far east. Then when video biggies were casting for a man with a steely eye, rich molasses accent, and muscular physique, to play the part of Jim Hardie, a detective for Wells Fargo, Dale was selected amongst a passel of other would-be cowboys. He made it, and as they say, the rest is history. Now "Tales of Wells Fargo" is to be extended to an hour and Dale is riding high as a star. But the blue eyed range rider isn't content to rest on his laurels, he has quite a beautiful singing voice and is showing it off to good advantage as he makes appearances all over the country at fairs, rodeos, etc. And when he is "resting," he writes scripts, produces movies, and also directs some of the episodes he stars in. Ask anyone in Las Vegas, and they'll tell you that everytime he appears at the gaming centers, draws bigger crowd than five card stud.

JOHN SMITH

Johnny is one of the best liked of television thespians. He always yearned for a career on the stage but it never seemed to materialize. In fact his career in movies wasn't what you would call a world beater until he began to play "bad guys" on dramatic offerings on video. Then he, along with Robert Fuller, landed top spot on Laramie, the hour long oat burner, and really made it big. "Johnny plays his role shrewdly," a veteran producer told this magazine. "He underplays and by doing this, many times completely steals the show. He is, off stage, quiet and serious, just as he is in the role he plays. Ask him to go horseback riding and he'll look at you as if you just got off a space ship from Mars. 'I get enough of that stuff on 'Laramie,' " he says. But if there is a boat race, a long (and we mean long) hike in the woods or even a hot game of tennis, Smitty never knows when to stop. But even though he likes sports, he's not one to shun spectator sports and baseball is his real favorite.

JAMES GARNER

TV gave him a gun, he used it for a while and when it got too hot to handle, Jim handed it back to Warner Brothers. He gained fame in movies, but his greatest recognition came in the role of Maverick. However, the dark and handsome actor always wanted to get out of his chaps and off his horse and do, either musicals, or straight dramatic roles. Only recently he got his wish and was, after a salary hassle that started the whole thing, released from his role. "I couldn't be happier after so many years of being confined to one part, to finally be freed," he told us in an exclusive interview recently. He's also doing a bit of singing on video too—well, who isn't, these days?

HUGH O'BRIAN

Hugh has been Wyatt Earp for a long time, and like Jim Garner figures it's too long. Every opportunity he gets, he takes dramatic roles and does a terrific job at them. When he appeared on the "Play of the Week," critics, accustomed to seeing him making love to a Buntline Special instead of a gal, were astounded at the O'Brian versatility. When Hugh isn't shooting Earp (which takes up most of his time, especially during his last season) he is appearing in Summer Stock all over the country. He even (what again??) has a record album out now called, "Hugh O'Brian Sings." I'm planning to do a few narrations on records, too, he told us. Incidentally, Hugh's fan club call themselves "Friends," "I hate the sound of that word fan," said the striking actor. They are my friends, and I am their friend. Fans are for rising temperatures or for dancers, but my public and I have an understanding. We are all buddies.

STEVE McQUEEN

Steve (he lost his gun too, as his "Wanted, Dead or Alive" reaches a successful conclusion) was discovered while he was laboring as a television repairman. Born and raised on a sprawling farm in Missouri, he left home to seek fame and fortune at the tender age of fifteen. Both eluded him, but he graduated the school of hard knocks with honors, working as a laborer, sailor, carnival barker, lumberman and finally a United States Marine during World War II. A chance meeting got him into New York City's Neighborhood Playhouse for dramatic study and he went right from there into Summer Stock and fame as Josh Randall on video. He's starred in many feature movies, loves to drive fast racing cars and tinker with hotrods, is married happily, and has, as one actress said it, "cutest accent this side of Dale Robertson."

CLU GULAGER

In certain camera angles the actor with the odd name bears a striking resemblance to Elvis Presley. And it doesn't stop there either. He plays a swinging guitar and really makes with the music. Many times on the set of "The Tall Man" with Barry Sullivan, the cast has a jam session as Clu clews them in with his own particular brand of country music. In case Clu, who plays a cross between a hero and a villain looks familiar to you, it's because he has played a villain on practically every TV dramatic show there is. "Bourbon Street Beat" was the one, however, that gained him the most notice. Any fight scenes Clu appears in are really wild, as was the one on the aforementioned show. He never uses a double and can take a fall or a punch with the best of them.

CLINT WALKER

Big Clint, who makes six-footers look like dwarfs, has had a long run of popularity in "Cheyenne," and his soft, Gregory Peck-like voice and giant physique makes femme hearts flutter from coast to coast each week. The big cowboy also gained fame of sorts when he became the only holdout from his studio to demand more money and get it, plus work in top grade movies. His "Gold of the Seven Saints," and "Yellowstone Kelly," both in color and CinemaScope (they had to use an extra wide screen!) were met with acclaim by critics and fans alike. Married, and a father, he was born in Hartford, Illinois, May 30, 1927. He attended Alton High and then worked at many jobs, bouncer, lumberjack, laborer, and sheriff. Van Johnson spotted him in the last job and suggested he try movies. He did, and it was amazing how quickly he clicked. He is a health food addict, munches sunflower seeds between takes on "Cheyenne."

NICK ADAMS

He used to be Nicholas Adamshock, but now, by court order, he's Nick Adams, and by public acclaim, the star of TV's successful show, "The Rebel." Nick had a rough time trying to break into the theatre, promoted himself to everyone who would listen, but that's all they did, listen. No one helped. He headed for Hollywood with his last couple of dollars in a desperate do or die attempt and he almost died. Then all the calls, the visits, the publicity he paid for, the people he cultivated paid off. He got a part in the motion picture, "Mr. Roberts," and his worries were almost over. A few other roles followed, but the world didn't set afire as Nick had hoped. When they searched for talent for "The Rebel" producers were astounded to see Nick, a guy who answered the hero's description to the proverbial "T." He was in and will be—forever, his fans hope.

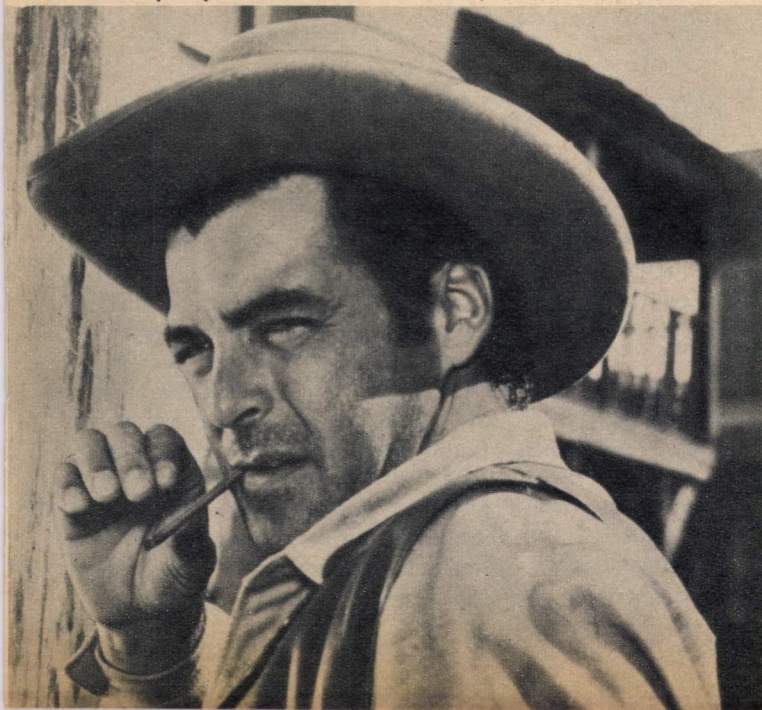

MICHAEL LANDON

Little Joe Cartwright of the great "Bonanza" series, Mike was a star high school athlete who, at one time, was sought by 45 different colleges for his prowess on the field, be it baseball, football or basketball. He studied at the University of Southern California and after his graduation won attention for his starring role in a quickie horror movie titled, "I Was A Teenage Werewolf." He and his wife cultivate tropical fish and are proud of their costly collection of bettas, danios, angel fish, barbs, and corydoras leopards catfish. They have more than fifty beautifully lit tanks set into the walls of their Hollywood home and have won many prizes at local exhibitions. Besides this, he loves to tinker in his workshop making tiled and ceramic topped cocktail tables and other things. The Landons have two children.

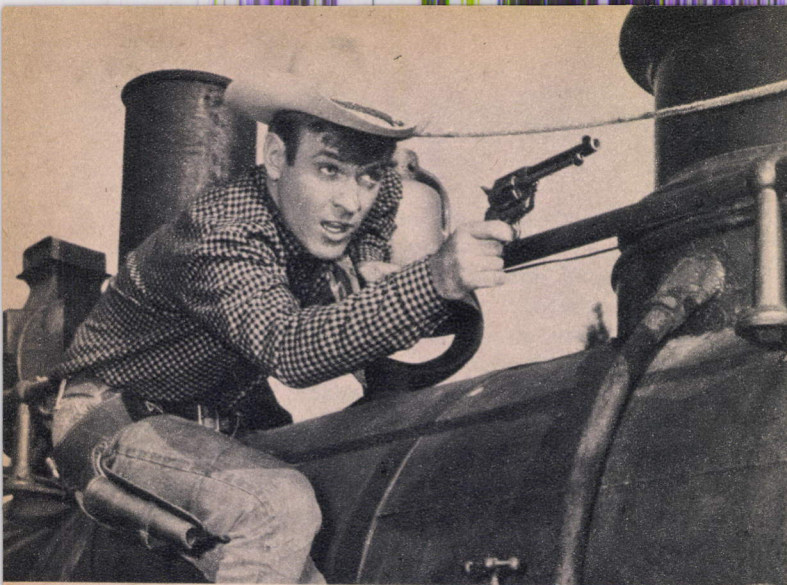

CHUCK CONNORS

Chuck (pictured here with Charlton Heston) started out as a baseball player and wore Brooklyn Dodger and Los Angeles Angel uniforms before he signed for a role in "Pat and Mike" with Spencer Tracy and Katherine Hepburn. Born April 10, 1921, Chuck is married to Elizabeth Ridell and is the Dad of four children. He practiced four weeks with the repeating rifle he uses on TV's "The Rifleman" to land the part of Lucas McCain. Now, experienced riflemen say that there isn't anyone faster with a rifle than the big, rangy, video cowboy. The success of his show is that it is a western with a heart, and woven in the story is the love of a man for his son, and the worship of his son for him. There is also the role of the sheriff, as played by Paul Fix. Comradship is the big thing here as Lucas and Micah try to play strong silent men and not show their love and respect for each other too openly.

RORY CALHOUN

Rory was a star for years in movies, seldom played cowboy roles. Then he hit TV and became the legendary "Texan." However, he didn't neglect his movie work. To the handsome actor, work is a tonic, and he labors around the clock without the least signs of fatigue. He was actually discovered by Alan Ladd's wife, Sue who got him his first movie break in "Nob Hill," and Calhoun went up hill in high gear after that. Born August 8, 1922 in Los Angeles, he has been married twelve years to Lita Baron and is the proud father of two lovely daughters, both of who want to be actresses. One, Cindy Frances, the youngest, often comments to Lita, "Why do men always hit Daddy on Television? Why aren't all men good like my Daddy?" (A tough question, Cindy, but if they were there would be no western stories, right?)

WILL HUTCHINS

Will, the "Sugarfoot" of TV is real-named Marshall Lowell Hutcheson and he was born in Los Angeles, California, May 5, 1932. He scales in at 165, is a deceptive 6' 1", has blue eyes and sandy hair. He went to Pomona College. Will, a shy, retiring type, was made to order for the "Sugarfoot" role of a wanderer who studies law as he makes with the adventure throughout the wild west. "I like TV," he tells us, "but give me movies any old time. I really had a ball making 'Lafayette Escadrille', way back in 1958 and hope that I'll make more aviation movies in the future." By the way, girls, Will is one of the most eligible bachelors in all Movietown.

BARRY SULLIVAN

Pictured here with Clu, Barry has played practically every role there is. His last television show was about a Harbormaster and didn't catch on, although the Cape Cod location was ideal and the stories top notch. Now he seems in his element as "The Tall Man," and the National Broadcasting Company is more than happy with ratings, mail, and all the things that go toward making up a prize package format. Barry attended New York University and Temple, wanted to be a lawyer but success in college plays took him away from the bar and toward the kleig lights of Hollywood. His real name is Patrick Barry and his first roles were in Summer Theatre. His first good stage part was in "I Want A Policeman," and first flicker role was in "Lady in the Dark" in 1944. Divorced from Marie Brown, he married Gita Hall. His most memorable role was in "Seven Ways to Sundown." "I didn't attain real stardom," he says, "until I got bags under my eyes. Then came the turning point. I wasn't a pretty boy anymore."

DON COLLIER

Don is the star of "The Outlaws," a real offbeat western that really has no hero. The theme is that crime doesn't pay and outlaws, natch, are the stars. Don, appears only in brief sequences, but power packed ones at that. By underplaying, he has received more notice than most stars who have weekly shows. "I believe," the westerner with the washed out blue eyes and square chin, says, "that the public won't tire of me so fast in this role. Too many good actors have lost shows because of over-exposure. The producers let me take some dramatic parts all for my self every so often and I can give them more attention than if I had to learn lines for the entire hour the program is on. My hobbies are horseback riding (A busman's holiday?) hiking, and swimming, and when I'm not doing these things, I'm adding to my collection of antique pistols and rifles."

THE RUMOR FACTORY

Jack Crandell called Bob Wagner at home to check on rumor that he was frightened to death of horses.

Bob Kida separates fact from fiction and brings you scoops from Storyville

Doris Day and husband Marty Melcher: Is this "happy" couple headed for their lawyer's office?

The "Untouchables" may be big with you but with Kim Novak it's the unmentionables...

RUMOR: Robert Wagner is frightened to death of horses. Has a clause in his contract stating that he will never have to appear in a western.

FOLLOW-UP: Not true at all. We called Bob direct and he told us that his trouble is a perforated eardrum that pains him when subject to the jogging of a horse; but if a fat role came up he'd take it.

* * * *

RUMOR: For years it's been said that Kim Novak wears only lavender lingerie.

FOLLOW-UP: We checked with the actress and she said: "It's my favorite color, but I have black, mint, and white, too."

* * * *

RUMOR: Harry Belafonte emotionally upset, visiting a psychiatrist regularly. They say friends are worried about the state of his health.

FOLLOW-UP: Partially true. Harry's been visiting a couchman for a long time, but no one is too worried.

* * * *

RUMOR: Roger Moore's veddy Briddish accent is a complete phony. He was born in Wyoming.

FOLLOW-UP: Moore was born in Blighty. Enough said. *

RUMOR: Debbie Reynolds' husband, Harry Karl, going to invest some of his big bucks in a series on television for his wife.

FOLLOW-UP: He wouldn't say yes — he wouldn't say no!

THE RUMOR FACTORY

Harry Belafonte's relaxed manner may be only for public appearances. Harry has been seeing a couch man for a while.

Brigitte Bardot, France's big box office bait, poses unique problems for her studio... keeping her alive! She is currently under heavy guard due to another attempt at suicide. This one was hushed up however.

Our Reporters Check Latest Hollywood Rumors and Bring You All-Fact Follow-Ups. Some are true, others ?

RUMOR: Brigitte Bardot tried to do the Dutch Act again. Only this time her suicide attempt was hushed up and the press never learned of it. She is under heavy guard by her studio.

FOLLOW-UP: We cabled our man in Paris and he confirms this story!

* * * *

RUMOR: Chuck Connors very dissatisfied with his video show, "The Rifleman," wants to make more flix. He will quit it as soon as his contract runs out.

FOLLOW-UP: Chuck says: "Sure I want to make more movies and the studio has agreed to letting me do this. But as for giving up being Lucas McCain? Never!"

* * * *

RUMOR: Red Skelton has the gamble bug; can't stay away from those crap tables and wheels whenever he plays at Vegas. They say he's dropping a fortune every night.

FOLLOW-UP: Red thinks he has the whole thing beat. He now locks himself in his room and plays the dime machines the management installs in his suite.

* * * *

RUMOR: Doris Day and her husband, Marty Melcher, fought it out one night at a Hollywood spot and they are both seeing their lawyers.

FOLLOW-UP: An item appeared in a trade paper stating that "Ann Day and her husband are heading for their respective lawyers." It was lifted by a gossip columnist who mistakenly made actress Ann into singer Doris, in her copy. The whole thing is not true. The Melchers are happy people. However, Ann and hubby Martin are not!

* * * *

Happy hubby Harry Karl is playing it cool . . . Won't say whether or not he's planning to invest in TV series for his lovely new wife, actress Debbie Reynolds.

RUMOR: George Raft itemed in papers as "finally getting his own TV series as a 'good guy.'" The story went on to say that Raft has never played a goodie on TV before, and is "eagerly looking forward to the role."

FOLLOW-UP: False. George played in a long series, "I Am The Law," as Lt. Kirby. So there!

* * * *

RUMOR: William Holden issued orders to his studio that he didn't want to pose for any more candid fotos. From now on, he said, he wants to check every bit of photography of him that leaves the premises and wishes the right to reject and accept pictures.

FOLLOW-UP: True. Bill is fighting the battle of Wrinklesville and wants to play it cool. •

Hollywood soon to have a new team of producers. Chuck Connors and Clint Walker may join forces.

Handsome actor Bill Holden is fighting for right to screen all photos of him released by his studio. Bill is in opening rounds of fight with Wrinklesville.

MENTAL PROBLEMS OF THE STARS

They say there's a woman behind every man – behind many movie stars in Hollywood today there stands his psychiatrist!

*Lawrence Tierney's brawling has ruined his career.
Above: He is being held down by an officer in Central Receiving Hospital after having been arrested by police on a charge of drunkenness.*

THE POLICE CAR CAME TO A SCREECHING HALT, sirens still racing. Four patrolmen leaped out and began dispersing the gaping crowd. The object of their curious stares came clearly into view as the milling people were reluctantly pushed back. A look revealed a beloved comedian, "the man of many faces," but this time he wasn't joking.

That evening, the 13th of May to be exact, Jonathan Winters was arrested at Fisherman's Wharf and was placed under observation at San Francisco Hospital's psychiatric ward. The offense? Winters had climbed the rigging of an old-time sailing ship, only to declare himself a man from "outer space."

What is it that gave rise to this episode? Many, knowing that Winters was a member of Alcoholics Anonymous, attributed his crack-up to drink; but doctors, and Winters himself, admit that it was a bona fide mental breakdown.

"But this is just an isolated example," you say. "This doesn't prove that a majority of others in Hollywood are subject to this sort of stuff."

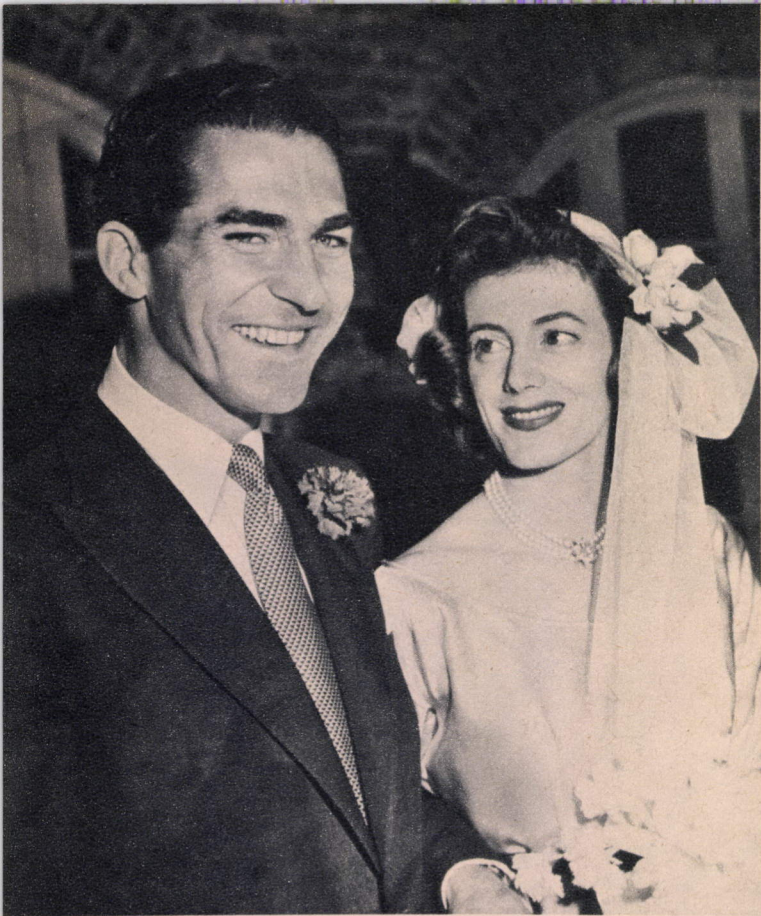

Others, many of them trained psychiatrists and psychologists, came to a different conclusion. "Movies and Madness," which was published in a psychiatric magazine called State of Mind, was authored by a famous psychiatrist who is a personal acquaintance of Movie TV Secrets' Dr. Harry Byron and is respected

MENTAL PROBLEMS OF THE STARS

The truth about mental illness in Movieville...the symptoms, the causes, and the tragic effects. A leading psychiatrist offers explanations and advice.

The above picture of Sarah Churchill was taken at the time of her marriage to photog Anthony Beauchamp. Drink is marring her personal and professional life. She, too, has felt the arm of the law.

Sarah Churchill pleads guilty to misdemeanor charge of being drunk in the public view. She apologized for causing "any inconveniences to the public and those I love."

Bela Lugosi, pitifully emaciated, signed himself to L. A. General Hospital for treatment as drug addict...

According to ex-hubby, Hedy Lamarr, was seeing psychiatrist. John Loder said she is so "mixed up I can't try to reason with her . . ."

Ava Gardner's European escapades, marriages, and headline making scrapes have marked her and made her appear older and worn, lately.

by experts the world over. He wishes to remain anonymous and we will not betray his confidence.

The following is a direct quotation from this authoritative source: "Three quarters of the Hollywood population is either insane, just getting over being insane, or about to be insane."

Dr. X, as we will call him, went on to substantiate this shocking statement with many examples.

Some of the more acute cases he described come to mind. There was the beautiful young actress who had succeeded in the long climb to stardom. At this wonderful moment in her career she cracked, without any previous warning. The staff at the world-renowned Menninger Clinic worked for years, but it is only recently that Gene Tierney has been able to pick up the threads of her shattered life.

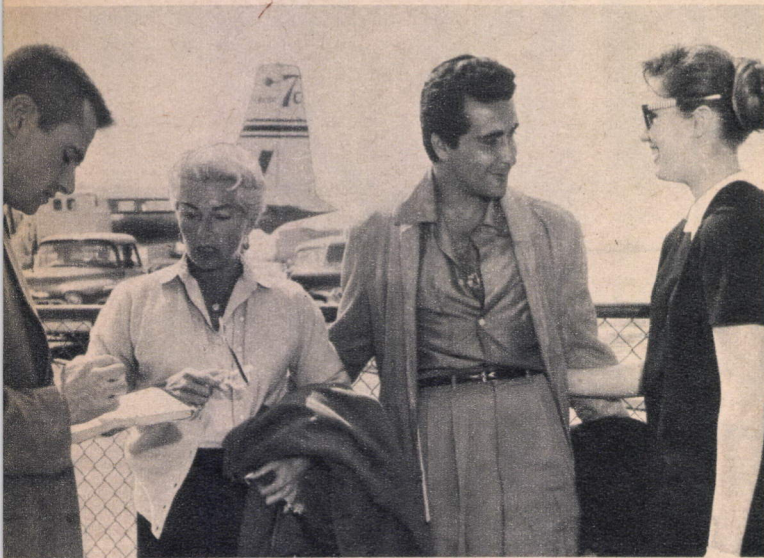

Court action again came into play in the case of lovely Frances Farmer. After taking Broadway and Hollywood by storm the talented actress simply lost control of herself. She was repeatedly in trouble for creating disturbances and for drunkenness. More than once she fled from officers of the law . . . and in far from decent attire!

Then, after several trips to jail, Miss Farmer went on the dope kick. Eventually her hospitalization was ordered by the courts due to the fact that she was found to be mentally ill. It was eight years before she was released. Only after seven years of slow and painful recuperation was she able to try a minor comeback.

Not all mental illnesses are as acute or as easily recognized as those I have mentioned. Some personalities demonstrate their less-than-normal emotional states by chronic immature acts. You read about them every day in your newspapers but few people who are untrained recognize these incidents for what they are — signs of severe mental disturbance.

Has Hollywood Cornered The Couch Market?,

Cheryl Crane, above right, moves to embrace the man, Johnny Stompanato, whom she later stabbed and killed with a carving knife. Lana Turner is second to left.

A happier Moment: Lana Turner and daughter

Susan Hayward's attempt at suicide is just one of the many such incidents that take place every day.

Actress Gene Tierney's unfortunate collapse at the very pinnacle of her career hit headlines throughout the nation and abroad. Only after eight years of intensive help was she able to resume her life.

attend a Hollywood premiere.

The young woman above was identified by Chief of Police as Frances Farmer. The one-time magnificent actress pleaded guilty to a vagrancy charge in Antioch, California. Soon after she went on dope kick Lillian Roth's bout with the bottle lasted for sixteen years. She finally made a comeback as nightclub singer.

The following are a few incidents from the life of one very famous Hollywood actor. First, it is painfully obvious to anyone who has worked with him that Montgomery Clift has frequent deeply traumatic fits of depression, even when he is at the studio and busily occupied.

During the short period of time that it took to film Raintree County, Clift nearly killed himself and delayed the filming for weeks when he ran his car into a phone pole. At that same time in his life he ran screaming from his house, stark naked, on two occasions. The cause . . . nightmares!

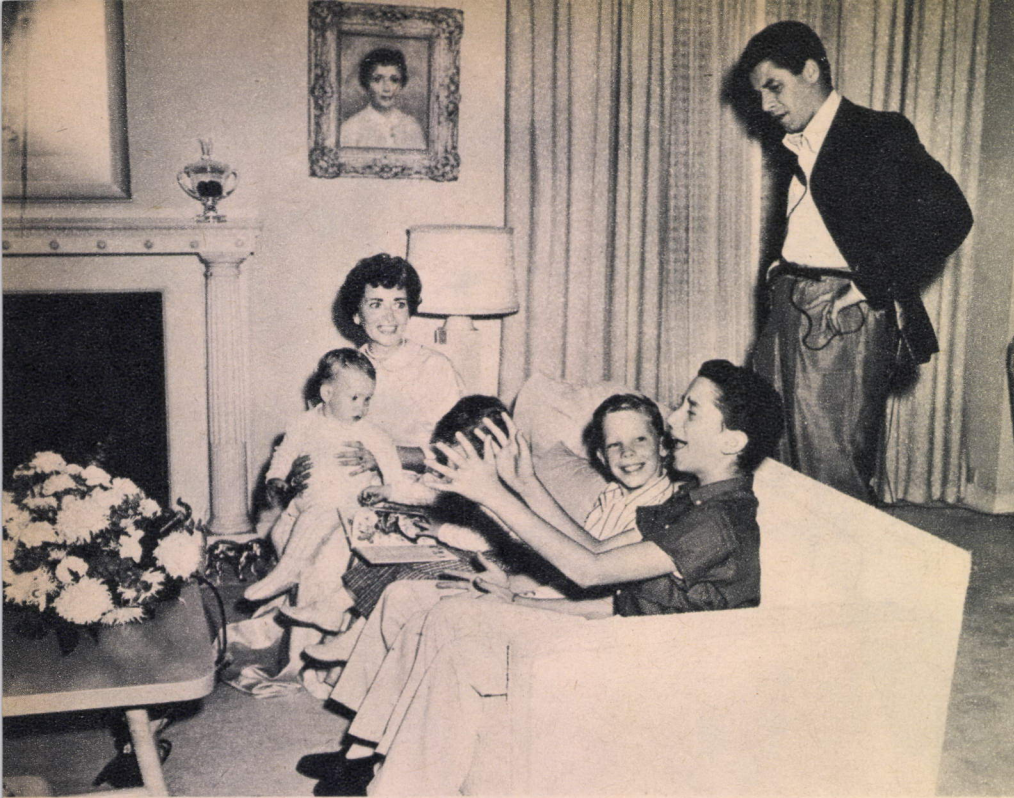

Sometimes on the set it seemed as if Monty wouldn't be able to support his own weight. He had to be helped from his dressing room more than once.

Another indication of his state of mind was what appeared to some as a suicide attempt. He was discovered in a hotel room in a semi-conscious state with scars on his fingers from a burnt out cigarette butt. Further examination proved that he had swallowed an overdose of sleeping pills.

A fairly long list of Hollywood personalities who have committed suicide or attempted it, who've been picked up on various charges from disturbing the peace to fighting, to narcotic charges — like Robert Mitchum — to drunkenness, as in the case of Sarah Churchill, could easily be compiled.

Lawrence Tierney's drunken escapades have led him to many a jail for a cooling-off period and because of these episodes he is out of work and marked as undependable. Susan Hayward's violent quarrels with her ex-hubby, Jess Barker, were in all the leading papers, including the time he chased her, when she was nude, from the house and into the street.

Mental problems...

Actor and comedian Jerry Lewis admits to having seen a psychiatrist and says he was helped.

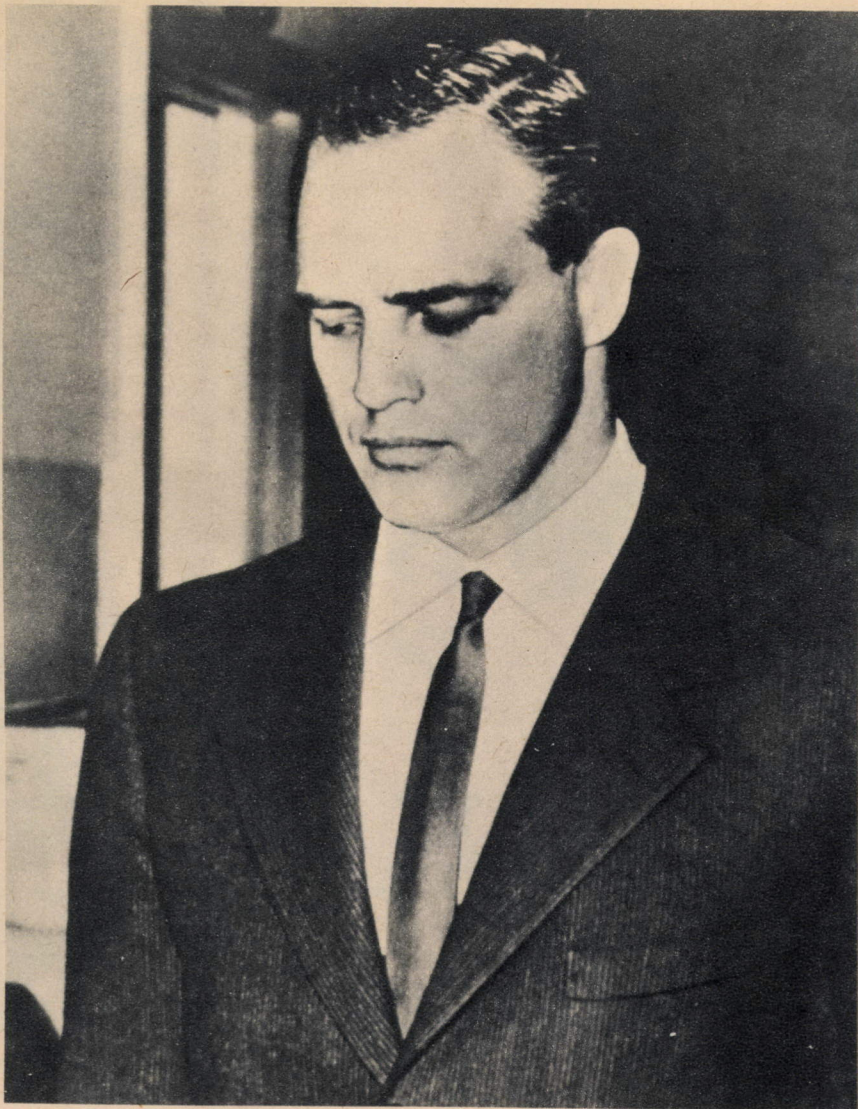

Montgomery Clift's haunted eyes tell a story that needs few words to supplement it. Actor is victim of terrible nightmares and depression fits.

Take Jerry Lewis for example. It is a common knowledge that he is difficult to work with. Many feel that he is egocentric and childish. This talented comedian has been said to fly into a rage, insult members of cast and crew, and to be jealous of the attention paid to his co-performers. This is not behavior, they say, that one would expect from a mature man.

According to directors many women in Hollywood demonstrate this same unfortunate lack of responsibility and maturity, to say nothing of self-discipline. The two most striking examples that have been commented on to us are Judy Garland and Marilyn Monroe.

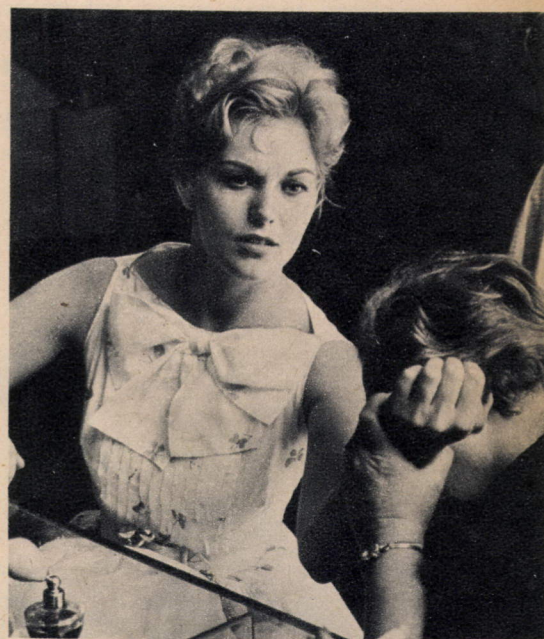

Co-workers and studio personnel have confided to us on various occasions that neither star thinks anything of arriving on set at the hour at which she was expected. Apparently, it does not matter to them that others are being grossly inconvenienced by their tardiness, not to mention the millions of dollars that they are costing their studios. The same has been said of Elizabeth Taylor. Even when it was her own money that was at stake Judy Garland did not appear at the appointed hour.

Actor Marlon Brando's offbeat behavior and woman trouble is no secret in Hollywood. Friends are glad to see that he has given up many eccentricities recently in favor of orthodox behavior.

Diana Barrymore's story is indeed one of the most tragic. An alcoholic, she met a premature death.

Lovely blonde Kim Novak is also under psychiatric treatment.

Why does Dean Martin make gags about being a boozier and then deny their reality when asked?

LIZ TAYLOR

Mental Problems of the Stars: Is Liz Unstable?

THE MOST VALUABLE ACTRESS IN THE WORLD, often referred to as the most beautiful woman in America, is also mentally unstable. Her disturbances show themselves in many ways.

Some have suggested that Liz Taylor is a hypochondriac, that many of her minor "illnesses" have been mental in origin.

Others point to the lack of success that she has met in her married life. They attribute some of her marital problems to her general lack of concern for human beings and her coldness. They cite the example of Michael Wilding as typical of her lack of feeling and consideration for others.

While she was still married to Wilding, Liz went around openly discussing her interest in Mike Todd. It is hoped that this type of behavior is a thing of the past and that Liz and Eddie Fisher will find happiness together.

Some say Elizabeth Taylor's many illnesses have been psychosomatic in origin, due to her instability.

Disregarding advice of friends and relatives, Liz insisted on accompanying husband Eddie to Las Vegas.

Liz had to be helped to her car by personal physician

DURING ONE OF HIS RECENT VISITS with Jack Crandell, Joe Carter, world renowned teacher of body building, got on the subject of movie actors and their physical condition. We were interested to hear from this physical culture expert that some of the world's best built men are in Hollywood.

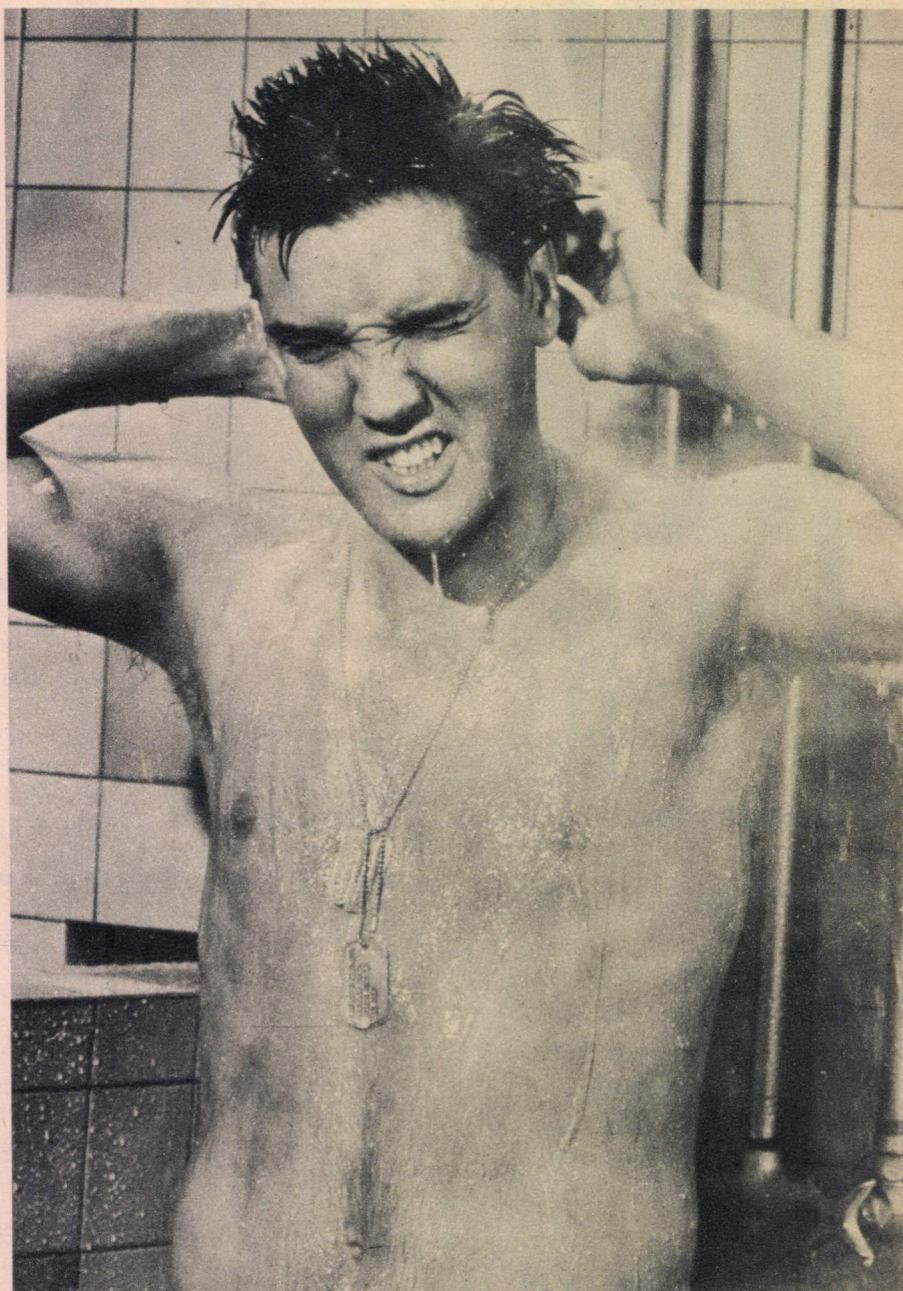

We decided to put Joe to the test. From our vast files he selected thirteen of the best that Hollywood has to offer. Then Joe chose the three men who, in his opinion, were worthy of the Movie TV Secrets Best Built Man Award.

Now, we are not going to release the names of Joe Carter's choices . . . not until you have had your chance to match the expert's selections, and cash in on the big nine prizes being offered. This is how you can enter the contest. In the blank provided, check off your first three picks in order of choice for the Best Built Man. Send the clipped coupon with reasons, in 25 words or less, why you think your choices are the best.

The first entry received in this office that matches Joe Carter's choices will receive a prize of $10. The next eight correct entries will receive cash prizes of $5 each. Send your votes to Movie TV Secrets Yearbook, 2 West 45th Street, New York, New York; Attention: Best Built Man Contest. All winners will be notified by mail. In making your choice you may consult anyone — doctors, friends, or gym instructors, but there is only one entry per person. •

Like them tall? Short? Lean? Lanky?

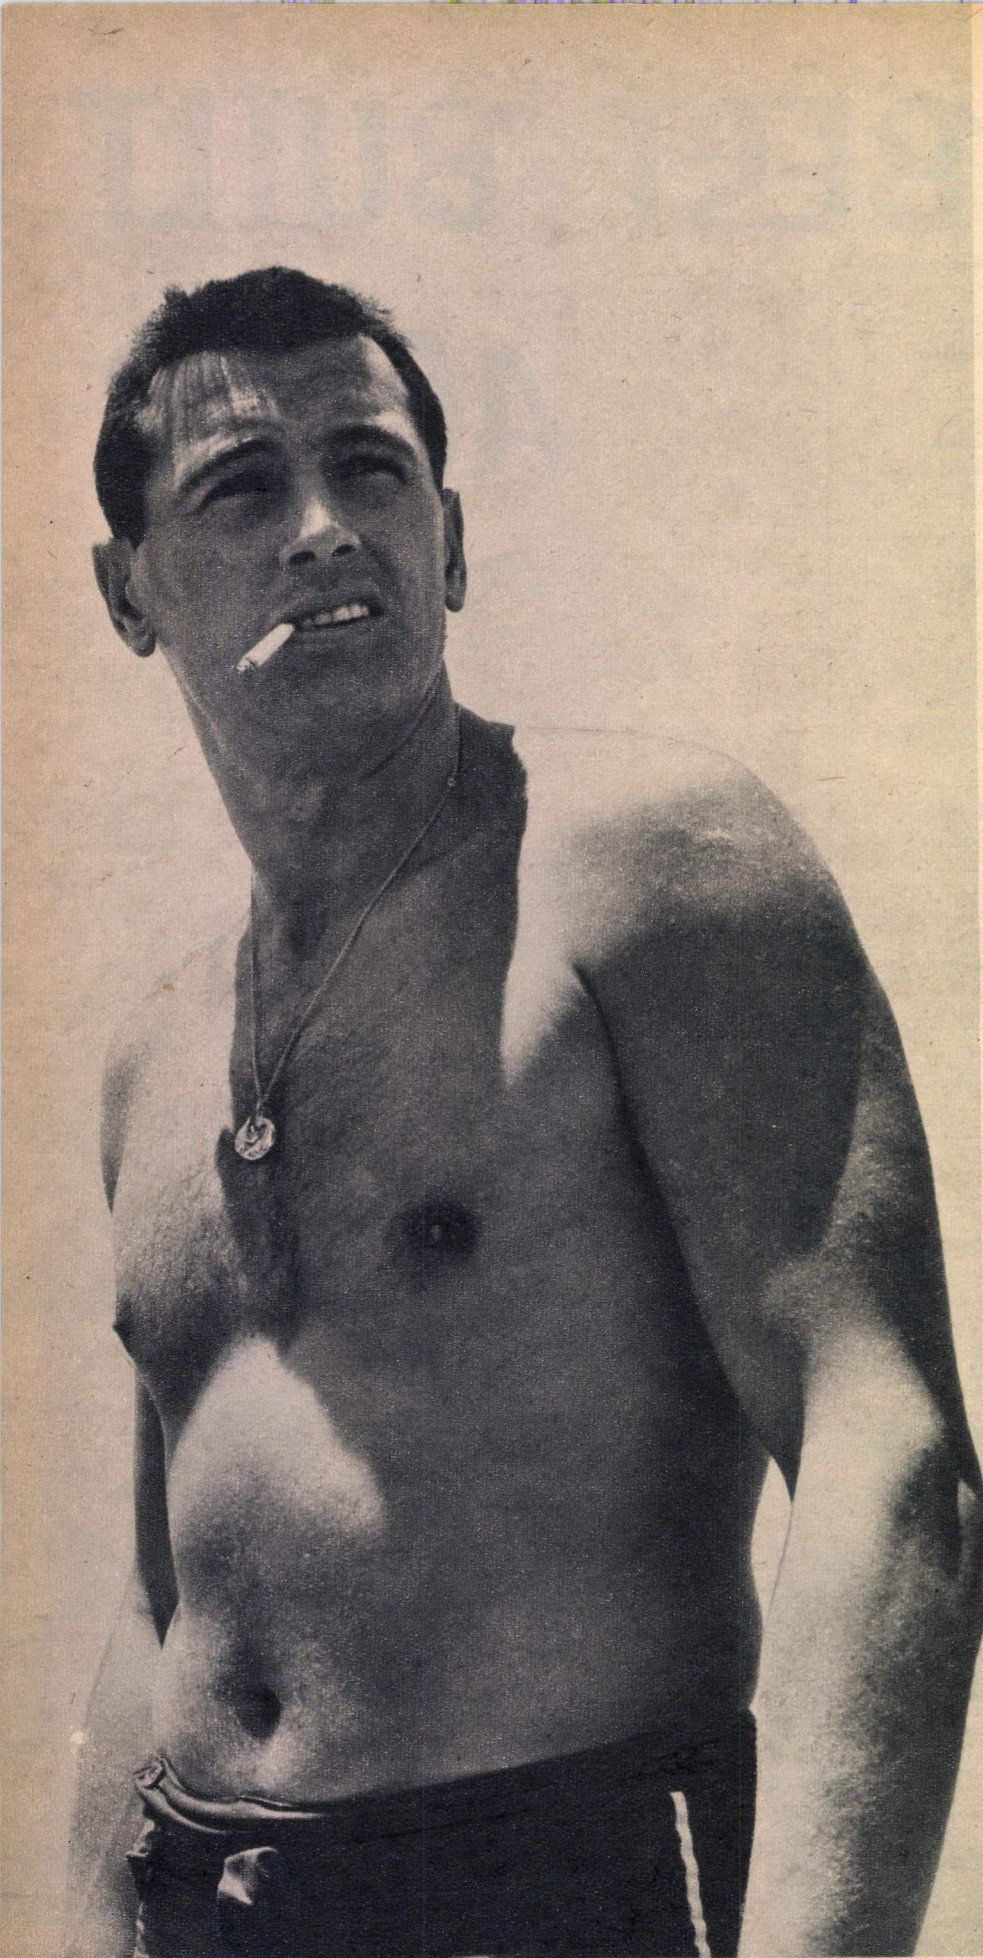

Choose Hollywood's Best Built Man!

Tony Curtis does some weight lifting to preserve a naturally sound build. His wife Janet helps him in this by planning menus that include lean meat, leafy vegetables.

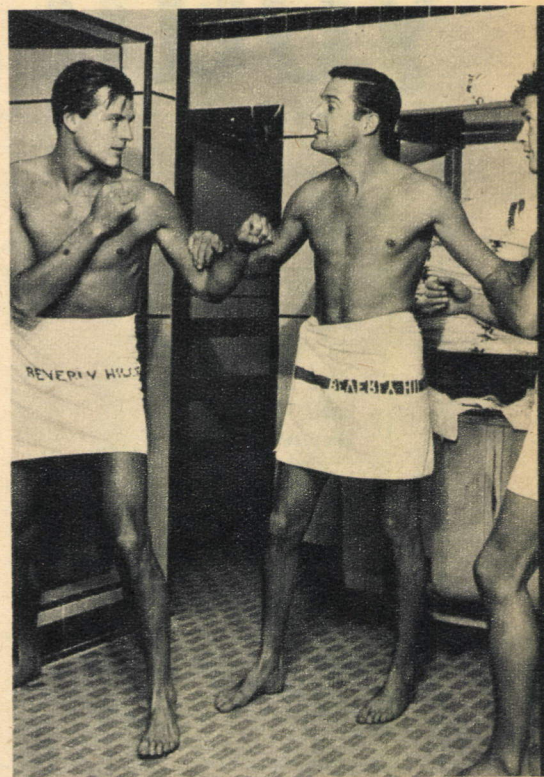

Roger Moore of "Maverick" has gym equipment set up in his own backyard. Above he works at the parallel bars.

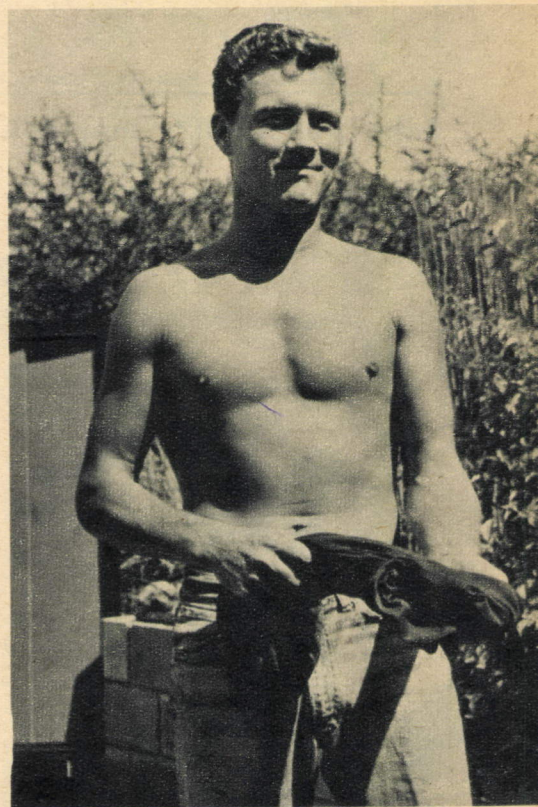

Rock Hudson keeps in shape almost by accident... He is a real beach addict and loves many strenuous water sports such as diving and water skiing.

No weight lifting or rough exercise for Jody McCrea! Jody prefers rub-downs and steam baths. His diet completely excludes fats and starches.

Roger Smith of "77 Sunset Strip" often works out with friends. He believes in push-ups and hand stands because they tone up all the muscles in the body and teach coordination and balance. Roger also enjoys long walks.

choices and in 25 words or less tell why they are Hollywood's Best Built Men!

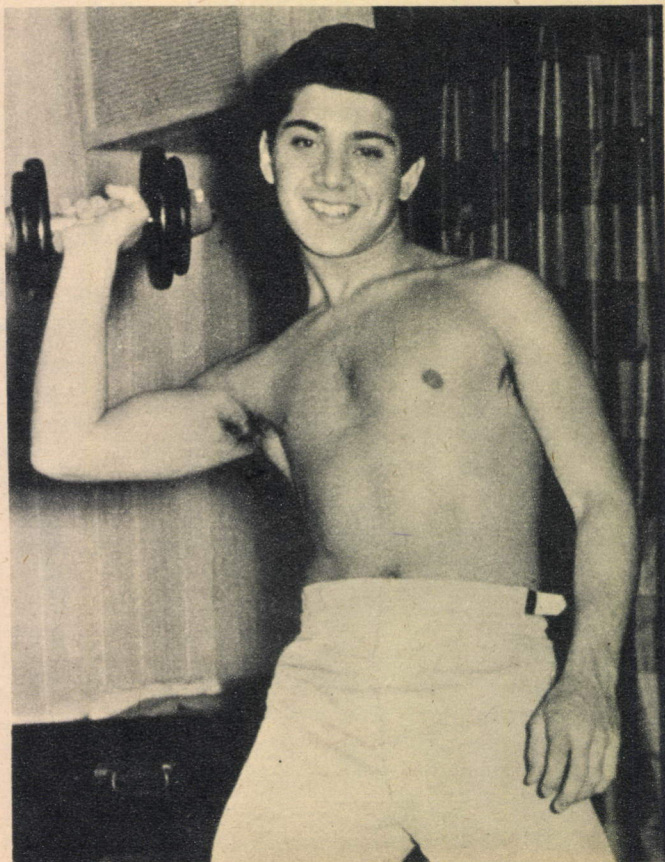

Television actor Bob Conrad brought his build with him when he came to the screen from a longshoreman's job. Bob keeps body in shape and muscles sharpened up for his strenuous roles by doing weight lifting at the gym.

Big Contest! Anyone can enter. Cash prizes

Sal Mineo's routine differs in many ways from the others. In addition to weight lifting and work with barbells he concentrates on getting plenty of sleep and vitamins, both in food and pill form. The great Chas. Atlas is his ideal for best built man.

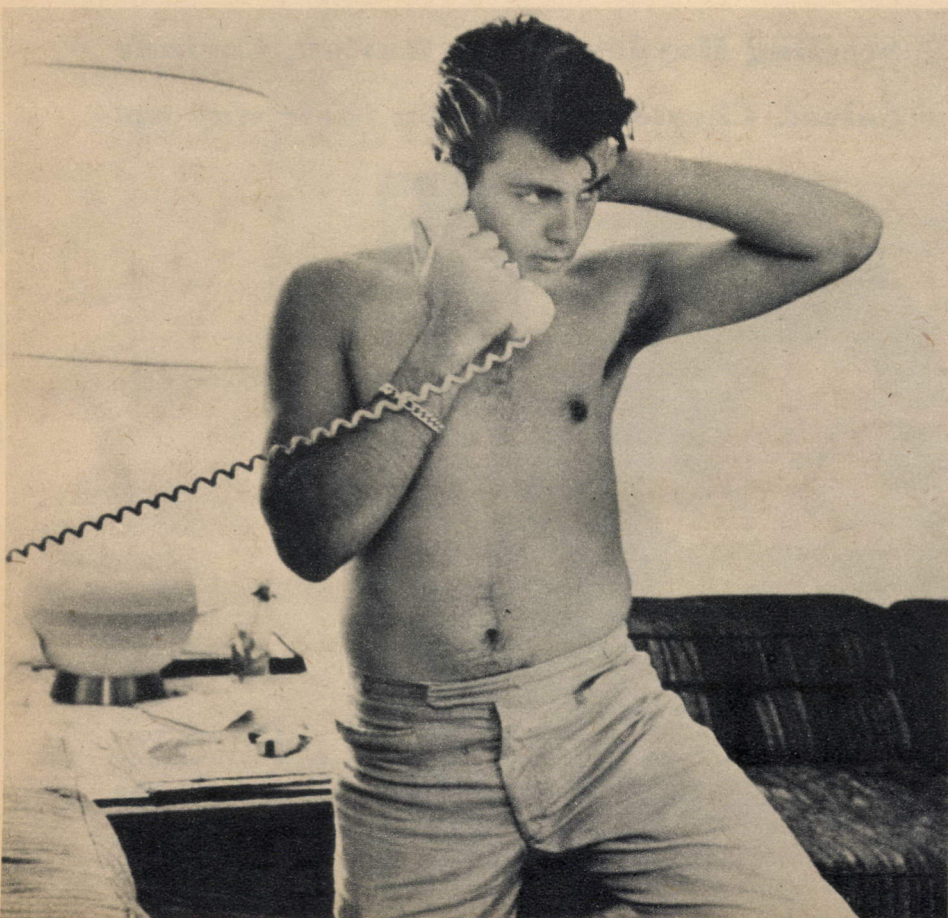

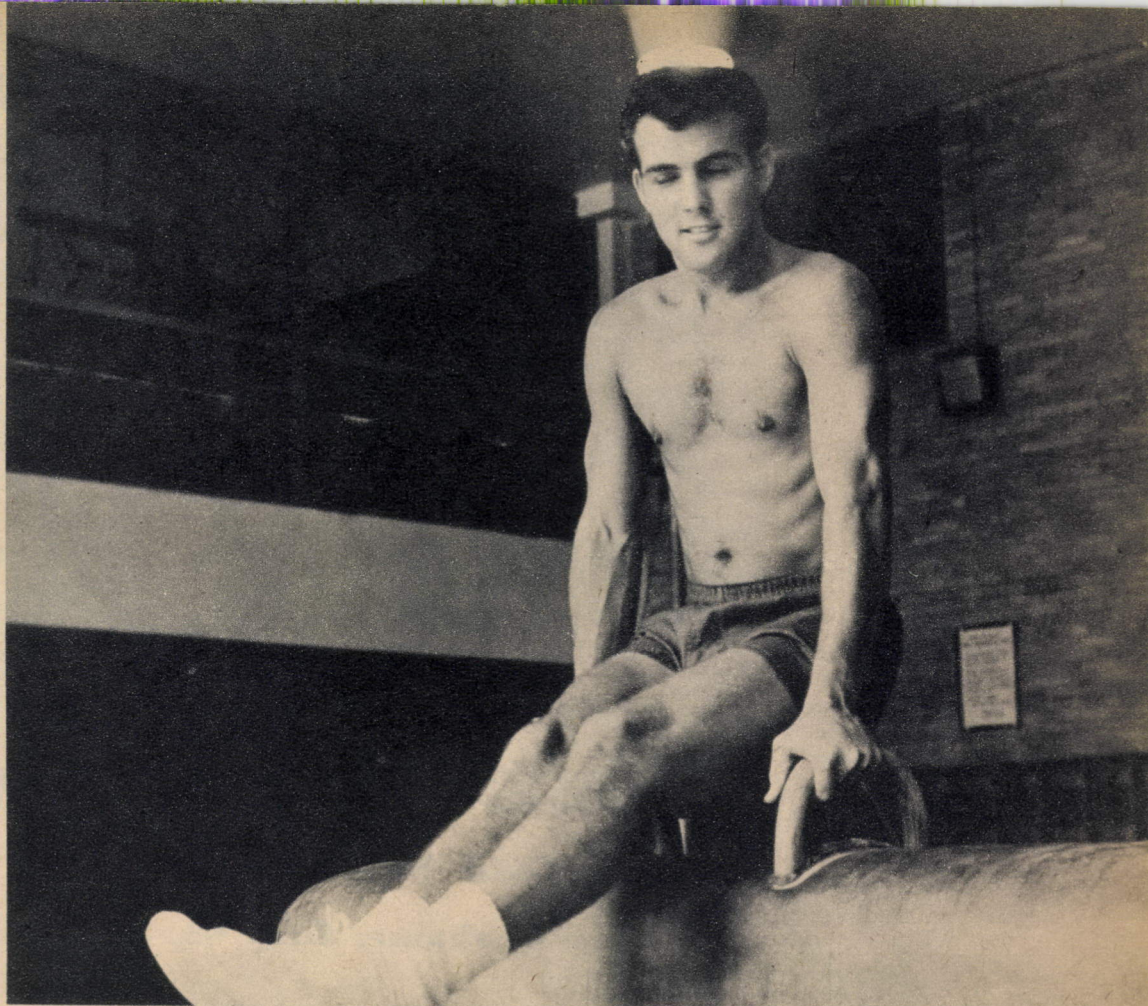

Peter Brown and Edd Byrnes come up for air after a work out in the pool. Both are avid divers and swimmers.

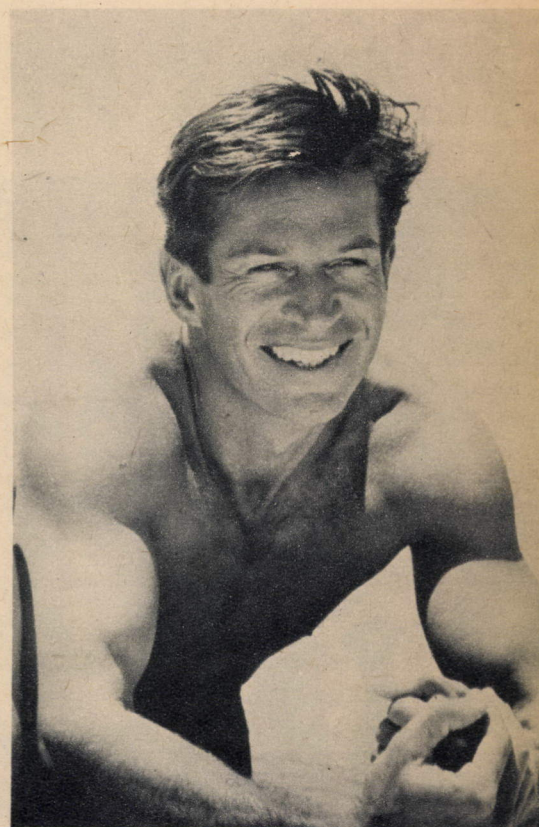

When singer Paul Anka isn't busy exercising his vocal chords he is often out hiking. Helps him keep in shape.

Crash Craddock relies almost exclusively on exercise for keeping physically fit. He told our photographer that he was a regular at the neighborhood gym.

Phone calls don't take it off, but Fabian has a naturally sound body.

George Nader has found that a three-fold routine of beach going, careful diets, and rugged exercise keeps him in excellent physical condition.

Jack Webb's career was almost totally eclipsed with the waning popularity of one-time favorite, Dragnet. Today Jack is making a spectacular comeback in films.

Alan Ladd, Eleanor Powell, Jack Webb, Gloria Grahame. Judy Garland, Joan Crawford,

STARS WHO ARE SHINING AGAIN

Sterling Hayden, Betty Hutton, Corinne Calvet, Chester Morris on their way up!

After a six year silence actress Judy Garland is returning to the screen. Her first role will be in Stanley Kramer's movie, "Judgement at Nuremberg."

Actor Alan Ladd whose popularity has taken a rather deep dip in recent years is on the way up again. The screen star and his wife Sue (above) seem to be enjoying their evening at Hollywood night spot.

"EXPECT THE UNEXPECTED" isn't a bad motto for people in show business to hold near and dear to their hearts. Neither is the old detective story routine, "one false move and you've had it!" Case and point: Jack Webb. Flying high with his portrayal of Joe Friday on the prize winning show "Dragnet," Jack's popularity climbed, and climbed, and climbed . . . and then went bust!

"Why," you ask? Just a little item that's called "oversaturation" in the trade. While Jack was doing first run shows on NBC, re-runs were being shown under a different title on smaller stations. Many times, especially in other cities, "Dragnet" was competing with itself.

"Dumb, de dumb dumb?" You bet it was! But Jack learned that lesson too late. He was sure at the time that selling rights to the second runs wasn't going to do him any harm.

The ending of the story isn't quite so sad as you might expect, however. Jack Webb's talent is working for him and he is currently making a big comeback in films, as an actor and director. "The Last Time I Saw Archie"—his latest.

Another example of the unexpected? Try Betty Hutton. She was stone cold dead in this country for quite a while . . . but all it took was an appearance at London's Palladium, rave reviews, and an appreciative audience and she has a good chance of resuming straight star billings.

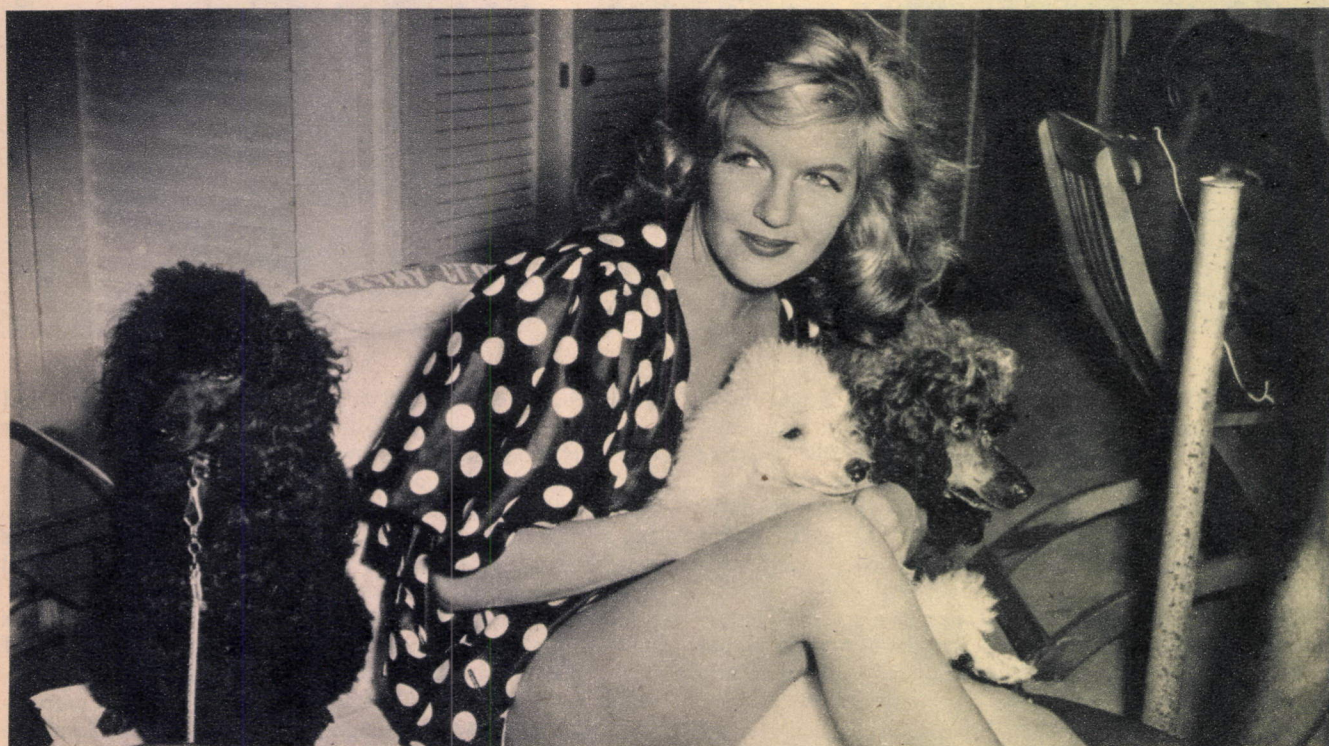

Another shockeroo is Eleanor Powell. After fourteen years and 157 pounds, Eleanor put on her dancing shoes, took off 35 of the 157 and came back with a huge bang! Recently, at the Latin Quarter, after ten months of rigorous preparation, Eleanor Powell brought down the house. Applause was so loud that the tapping was drowned out many times; and it wasn't sentiment either. The years that Eleanor spent in voluntary retirement increased rather than decreased her, beauty and her talent. •

are beginning to look like stars!

After having the honor of being the youngest actress to ever win an acting "Oscar," for her performance in "The Bad and The Beautiful" in 1953, Gloria Grahame's career took a spectacular nose dive. Today she is planning a come back and is looking for television roles...

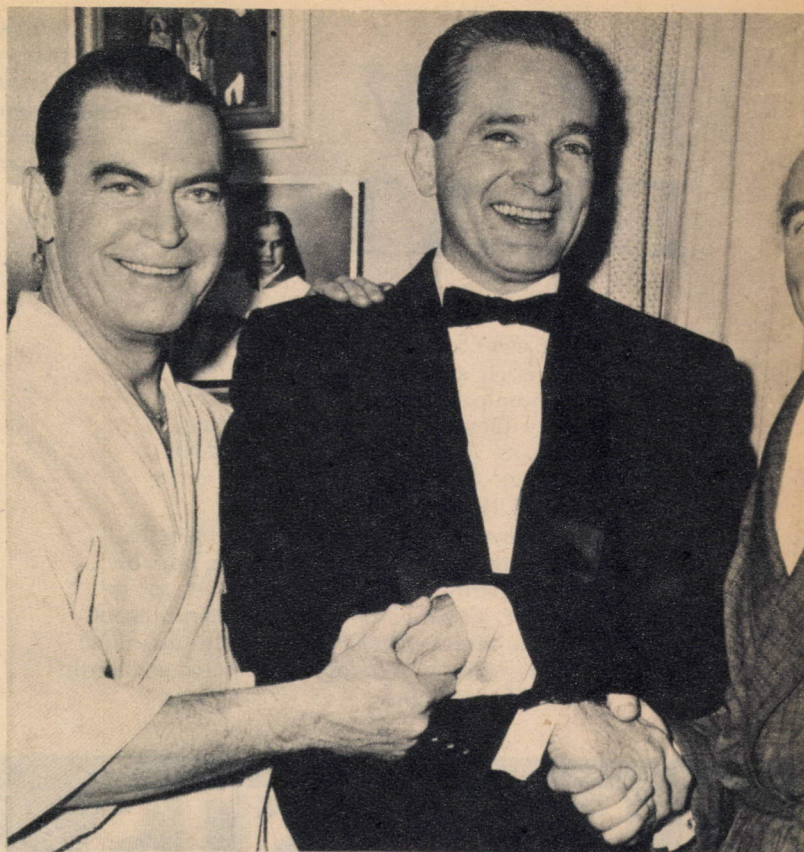

Betty Hutton whose movie appearances became few and far between a while ago turned to television. Her luck still seemed to be bad when she lost the Betty Hutton Show. Many in America thought her career was over until Betty wowed British audiences at the Palladium.

Corinne Calvet, who seemed to lose interest in her movie career when she was in sight of the top, is now a high ranking cabaret entertainer. In her first movie appearance, "Battleground," she played a French girl.

Dancing star of films and stage, Eleanor Powell, is returning to active show business after an absence of fourteen years. Eleanor is preparing in Las Vegas.

Whereas most stars worry about succeeding in their first comeback attempts, Chester Morris is well into second. He is now playing in "Advise and Consent" on Bway.

Actress Joan Crawford has found herself in a familiar position. Not young enough to play the usual romantic leads Joan is looking around for more mature roles.

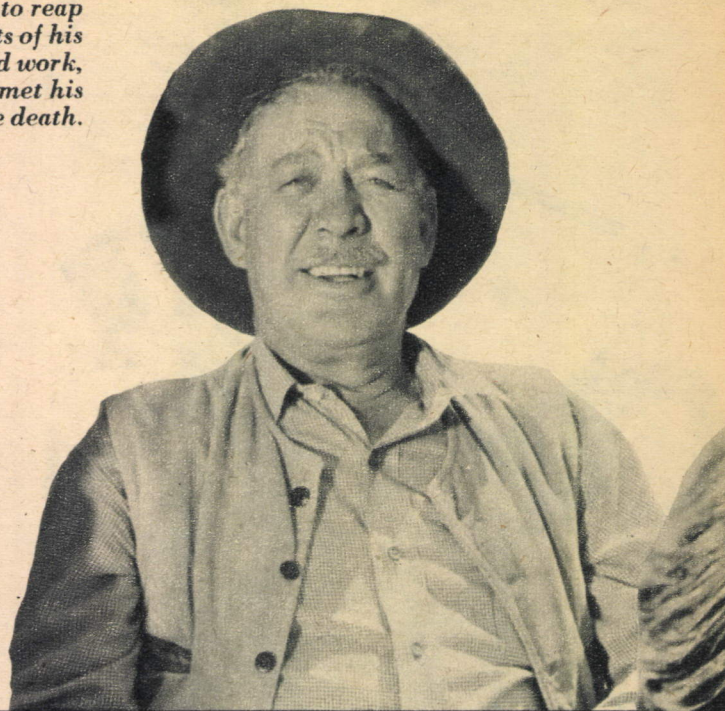

Sterling Hayden left what looked like promising career because of trouble with wife over custody of children. Lately Sterling has been making personal appearances.

HOW DEATH

Just as he was beginning to reap the fruits of his talent and work, Ward Bond met his premature death.

DEATH ALWAYS LEAVES sadness in its wake but rarely does it spell as much grief for so many people. November 16, 1960 was a tragic day for thousands, both in this country and throughout the world, for it marked the passing of one of Hollywood's all-time screen greats, CLARK GABLE.

The beloved actor was taken from his wife Kay unexpectedly when he was at the peak of his popularity and his strength, or so he thought. Cause of death was a heart ailment which struck Gable, a ruggedly masculine personality as he joyously awaited the birth of his first child.

HAUNTS

The great unknown has also claimed TV and screen personality WARD BOND who was the growly-voiced wagon master of the NBC favorite, Wagon Train. For many years Ward was a supporting actor in movies and an excellent one at that. Director John Ford insisted on having Bond in every one of his films.

It was only recently, with the advent of his part in Wagon Train, that Ward received the recognition he deserved and attained, by virtue of his compelling merit, the position of a central character. It is particularly tragic that death claimed him at this gratifying time in his career.

We will miss this gruff sounding, tender-hearted Western star.

Books could and no doubt will be written about GARY COOPER'S spectacular and enduring career as a box-office favorite. Tributes to this man have poured in from all over, lauding him as much for his off-stage life as for his great talent.

Coop, by the time of his premature death due to cancer, had become a world wide legend.

THE STARS

Swashbuckler Errol Flynn died soon after he made the statement that he was ready to devote a few years to "women and litigation."

Jeff Chandler, a star for many years past on from complications following serious surgery.

Death always leaves sadness in its wake but rarely does it spell as much grief
for so many people as when a great star passes on.

Leading papers, which don't usually editorialize, have gone so far as to say that "if there is a more likeable man within the confines of show business we have yet to find him." Queen Elizabeth II of England was among the fans who took time from their busy routines to send condolences to his family.

GARY COOPER began his career as an actor in silent films. When "talkies" began, critics predicted gloom and doom for the silent cowboy. They could not have been more in error. From his first film, The Virginian, in 1929, to "The Naked Edge," his last great presentation, GARY COOPER, non-actor, portrays the "American Image."

Ex pro football player PAUL DOUGLAS was a favorite of film goers in roles that varied from drama such as "Clash by Night" to a laugh-filled comedy like "The Solid Gold Cadillac." Paul's big break in movies came after his success in the Broadway comedy "Born Yesterday." Before he began his acting career Douglas was a radio announcer. His wife, Jan Sterling, was with him when he passed away suddenly.

ERROL FLYNN, who admittedly planned to devote a good part of his remaining years to "women and litigation" died with his "protege," 17 year old Beverly Aadland at his side. But the real ERROL FLYNN, the one we will all remember actually died years ago. Flynn will be famous for his swash-buckling roles in films like "Captain Blood" and "Mutiny on the Bounty." When he grew too old to play these roles in movies Errol continued to act offstage. As a matter of fact, after he did the Barrymore story, as many people have pointed out, Errol Flynn seemed to step into Barrymore's shoes, to behave as he did. He went through all the Barrymore stages, from drinking heavily, to dating girl after girl and finally raiding the younger set. Those who appreciated his talent will forget these later years, however, and remember Flynn as he was in his last great performance in "The Sun Also Rises," a vividly beautiful movie.

The late JOAN DAVIS made many movies and various appearances on TV, but she is best known and loved for her show which is now in its fifth re-run and still popular — "I Married Joan." When this show had run its cycle, Joan retired from show business, much to the remorse of fans and professionals alike. Carol Burnett was frequently referred to as the new JOAN DAVIS but unlike Carol, Joan was rather quiet offstage. The actress-comedienne died of a heart attack in the early part of 1961.

MARGARET SULLAVAN was born on May 16, 1911 in Virginia and met her tragic death last year from an accidental overdose of barbituates. After her death her secret was revealed—that she was suffering from a nerve-wracking struggle with deafness. She came to Hollywood in 1933 after success in Stage Door.

Movie TV Secrets Special Yearbook pays tribute to Movietown greats who have been taken from us.

Actress-comedienne Joan Davis, who recently died of a heart attack is still being seen on TV. Her show, "I Married Joan," is in its 5th run.

THE RE-BIRTH OF VALENTINO!

The screen's hottest lover boasted he would return to life after death. They laughed, but now his weird prophecy has actually come true.

WHEN MOVIES WERE IN THEIR INFANCY, legends and heroes abounded, but of all, none, up to today, ever packed the emotional appeal and impact of Rudolph Alfonso Raffaello Pierre Filibert Guglielmi di Valentina d'Antonguolla — the man the world came to worship and love, Rudolph Valentino.

Tons of copy were ground out about him, some true, some false. The Italian born boy who came to the U. S. and labored as a sweeper in a saloon at fifty cents a day, was sure someday the fates would grant him fame, and they did, more than any other man. Even after his funeral, which attracted 90,000 persons, some maintained he was still alive, horribly disfigured and in an asylum. They even published a foto purportedly of him. The whole thing was a hoax of course, perpetrated by those who recalled that he often said "I will come back, someday, somehow!" But now he has! Peter Pan Brassiere Co. recently kicked off a TV spectacular of his life, and all over the country Rudy's old films and video shows made up of old clips are being shown to huge audiences.

The aforementioned documentary was amazing as it still held up through time and there were few signs of

When he was on a trip to Italy, he painted on board ship. What he lacked in art training he made up in a daring attitude toward his subject matter and use of color.

Anthony Dexter, the man who portrayed Rudy on the screen. Dexter was hit by a jinx, never made it at all after his great impersonation.

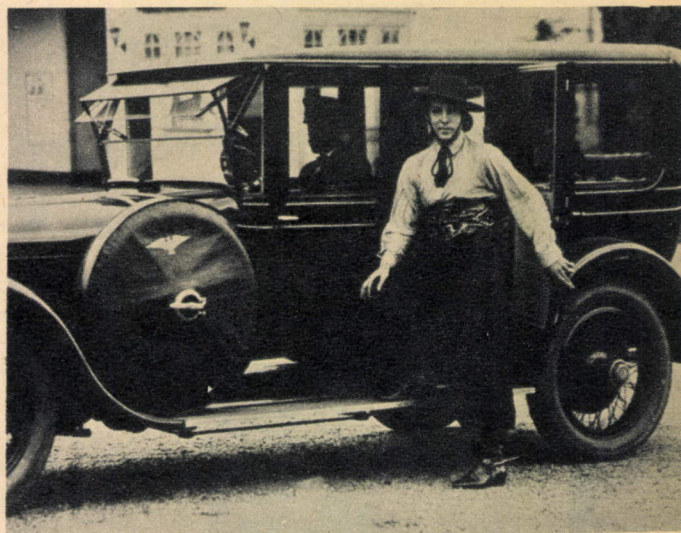

dating. In fact, after the show the studio switchboard lit up like a Christmas tree. Who was calling? New fans, people who had never seen Rudy — plus legions of older folks who remembered and worshipped him.

After Rudy's death, five San Francisco women purchased the huge, sprawling estate he owned called, "Falcon's Lair," for $100,000 with the idea of maintaining a permanent shrine, but in 1951 the home was destroyed by the state to make room for a highway. We were there and saw a horde of women stripping the place and grounds as they held up a full crew of workers, bulldozers, etc. That was just 25 years after the passing of the actor. A new generation was around but he still haunted the minds of women with his slinky-eyed hot look, muscular physique, dancing ability and fine acting. Even today, there are long strings of mysterious "women in black" who place fresh flowers on his grave. Pola Negri, Vilma Banky, and others in his leading lady parade have been at one time or another credited with his worship. But as long as there is a woman left in this world, there will be memories of the greatest man the silver screen has ever known — Rudolph Valentino! •

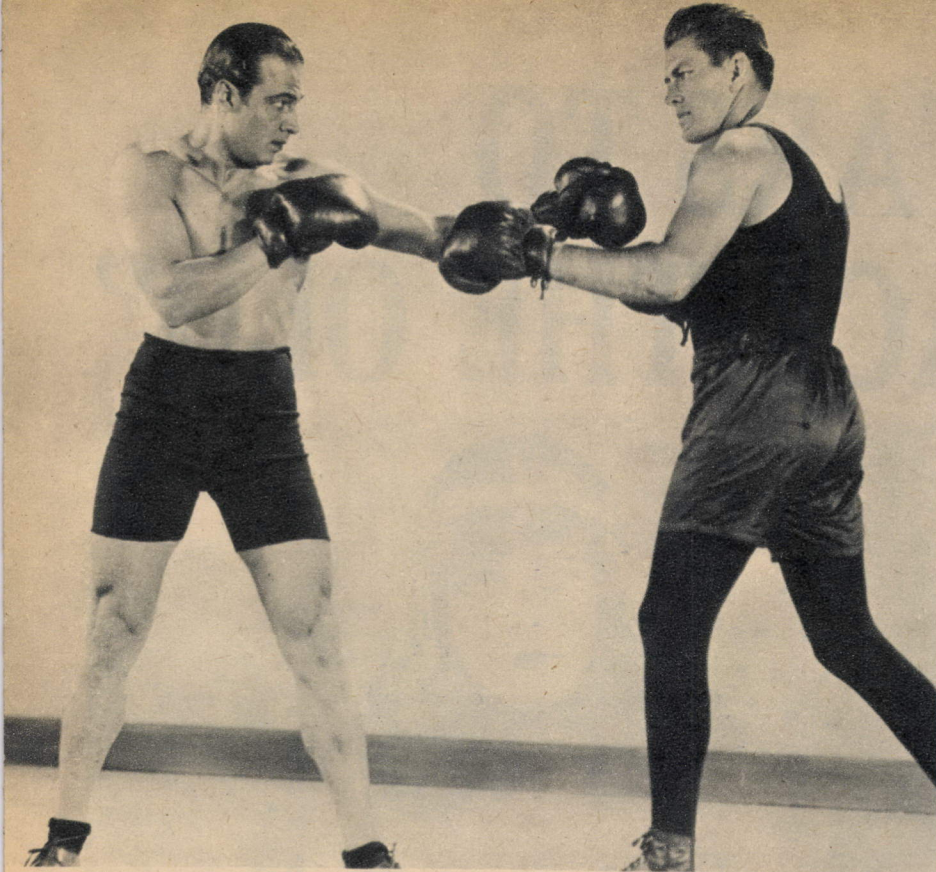

A lesser known movie, "Conquering Power" was re-released after the matinee idol died.

A still shot taken by the studio as he alighted from his car on way to movie set.

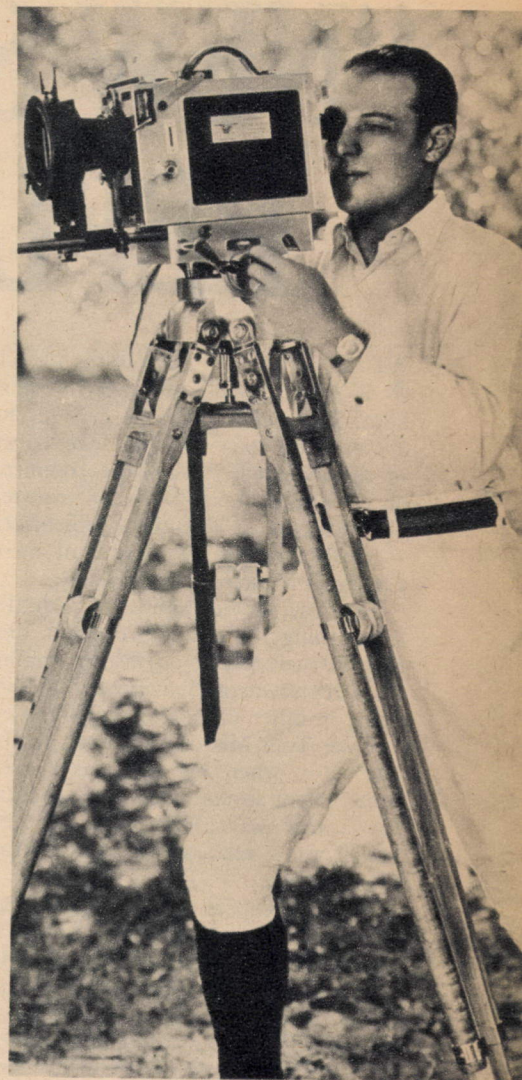

No publicity pic this. He was a hunter and great adventurer.

Rudy, receiving pointers from Gene Tunney, when Gene was light-heavy champ of the world. Tunny was surprised at Rudy's strength and skill.

He was a swordsman, all around athlete who boxed, swam and rode horses with a masterly skill. And his dancing set the world on fire.

Above, he was top photographer and cameraman. Below, hoax picture supposedly of him in asylum, disfigured. After all this time, we've exposed it as a still from long forgotten movie, "The Sainted Devil."

This foto ran in papers and was titled, "Rudy lifting the veil on after life." He jokingly posed for it just before fatal ruptured gastric ulcer.

"NEW STARS TO REPLACE THE OLD"

IT IS AN OLD SAYING THAT EVERY TIME a man dies a child is born. This belief probably grew up as a means of consoling the loved ones of the deceased. It is also a comment on the relentless forces of nature; She takes away and then replenishes—totally ignoring the desires of men. Change is constant and inevitable.

In a way, movie studios try to do the same thing. When a great star dies they immediately begin casting around for a replacement. Sometimes they succeed; in other instances, they don't.

Take Tom Mix for example. In the late '30's, when his star was on the wane, talent scouts scoured the country for a new star. The result of their search was a relatively unknown actor, Gary Cooper.

Today Coop is no longer with us. He has gone down in movie history as one of the show biz immortals and the cycle of change continues. This beloved cowpoke and man of few words is followed by handsome Clint Walker. It is still too early to know if Clint, however, will succeed in filling the Big Coop's shoes.

Another try was made in the case of Rudolph Valentino, but this time the substitution was less successful. It was in the minds of his studio to take the unknown Anthony Dexter, who is almost literally Valentino's double, and cast him in the same types of roles that Rudy had played so successfully. But after Dexter completed the Valentino story for Hollywood he fizzled, and Valentino's chair is still vacant . . . perhaps it will be so forever.

On this and the following pages, Movie TV Secrets Special Yearbook would like to pay tribute to some of the stars who shone in decades past, and to their young successors who we hope will do justice to the screen immortals who preceded them. •

Famous star of screen, Theda Bara played many exotic roles. In this picture she is outfitted for her part in "Salome." She received much publicity and yet was always a bit remote from her many admirers.

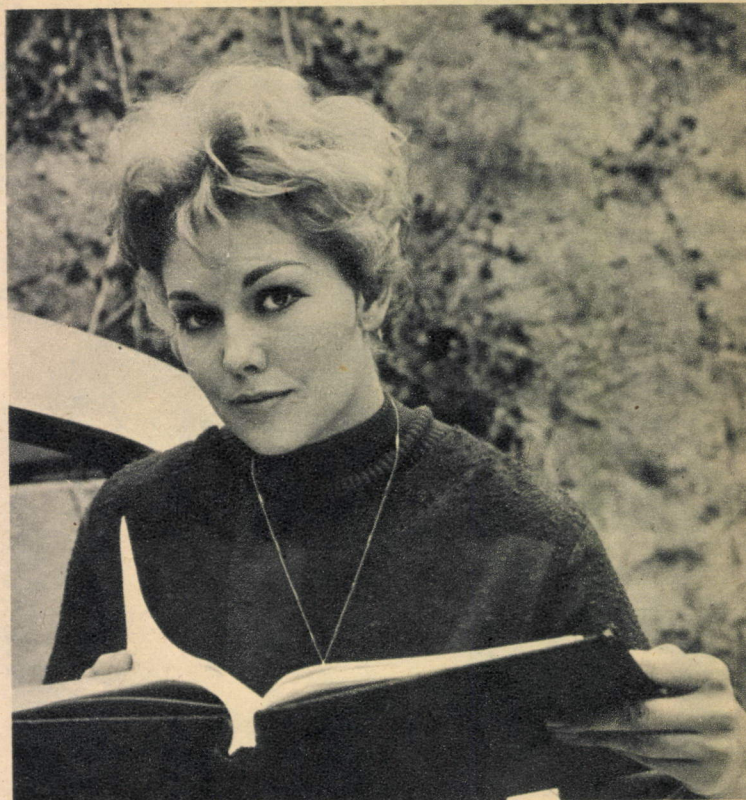

For every star that falters or falls there's another waiting in the wings. No matter how great the loss, maybe, is, the show must go on.

Liz Taylor, with her dark hair and eyes is very reminiscent of Theda Bara. She too is constantly in the public eye, and yet she is not really "known" by her fans.

Jean Harlow

Kim Novak

Jean Harlow and Kim Novak not only resemble one another physically, both stars played "sirens" in the movies.

Diane Varsi

Greta Garbo

Diane Varsi is the first Garbo "type" in a long time. Both left Hollywood when their popularity was high.

Mae West

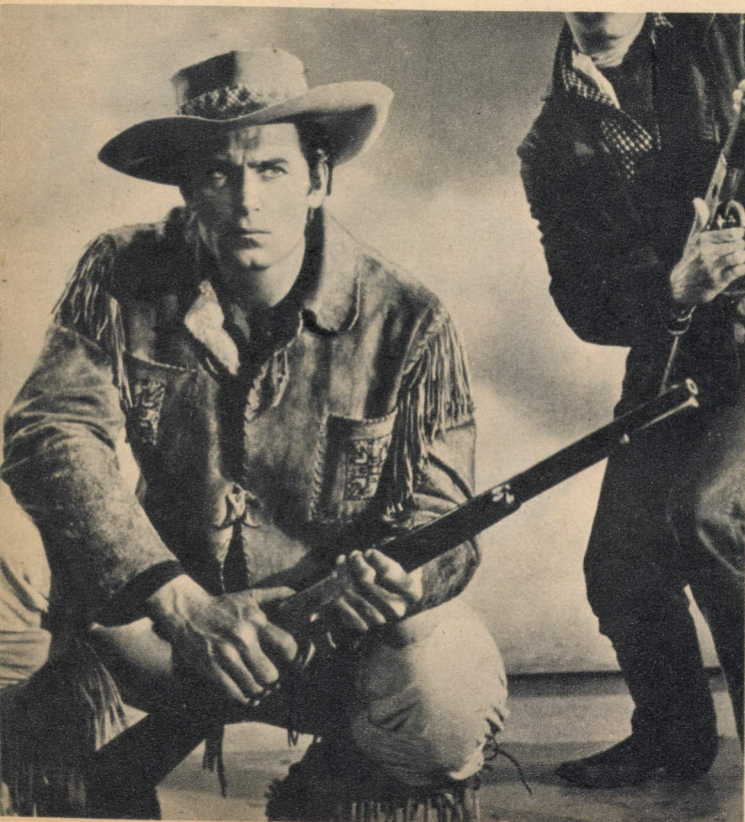

Jayne Mansfield

These two bombshells are about the sexiest of their respective eras. Both enjoy releasing wacky remarks to press.

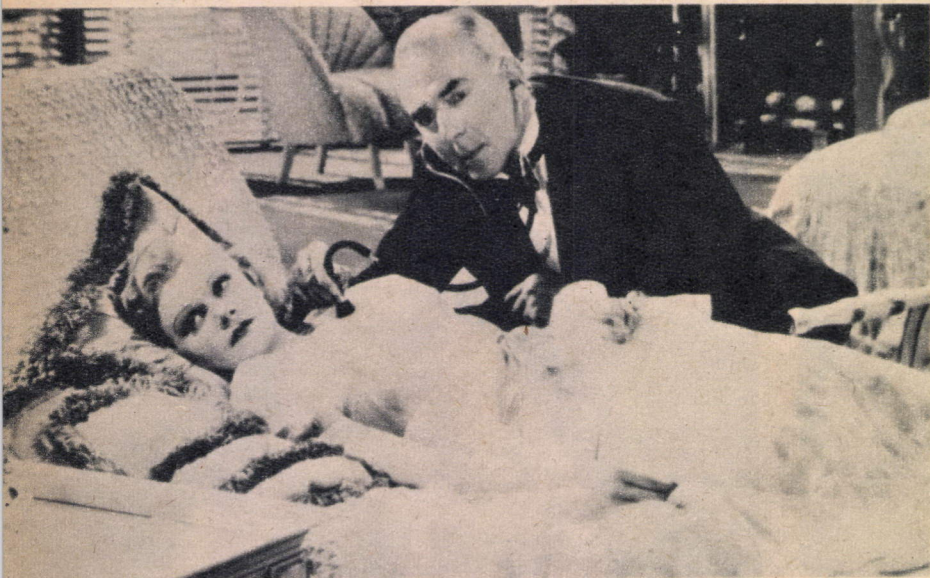

Clint Walker

Gary Cooper

The strong, silent cowboy, Clint Walker, big in TV, movies, is expected to fill the boots of great Gary Cooper.

NEW STARS TO REPLACE THE OLD

Clara Bow

Marilyn Monroe

These gals were embodiment of sex in two different movie periods. Clara Bow epitomized "uninhibited female" of 1920's and Marilyn's highly attractive face and figure helped her to become the star attraction of the 1950's.

Andrew Sisters

McGuire Sisters

The comparison here is an obvious one. Both groups come in three's and appeal approximately to same audiences. The Sisters' hits have been myriad. Remember "Apple Blossom Time"? For the McGuires, the hit "Sugartime."

Katy Jurado

Dolores Del Rio, Mexico's first lady of screen and stage, left Hollywood fifteen years ago. Her successor, also Mexican, is Katy Jurado. Both of these Latin beauties had rather unfortunate experiences with men and romance.

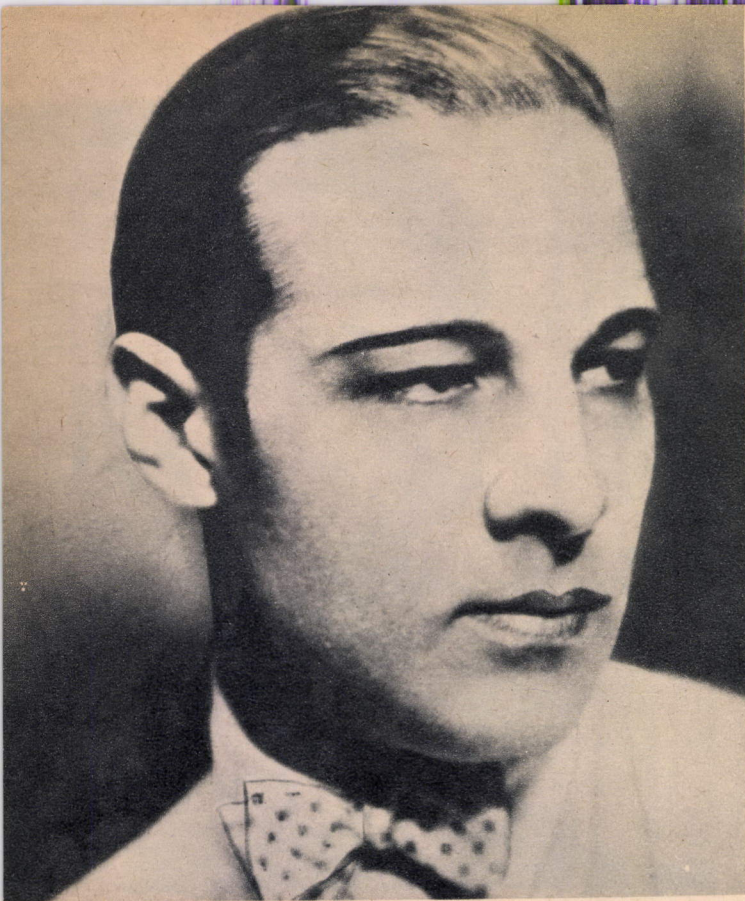

Dolores Del Rio

Martha Hyer

Both Grace Kelly, who abdicated Hollywood throne for real one in Monaco, and Martha Hyer are sophisticated and refined in addition to being beautiful. They have been referred to by admirers as pair of "white glove girls."

Grace Kelly

Rudolph Valentino

Apparently these two are doubles in looks only. Dexter's career fizzled after his portrayal of the late screen idol.

Anthony Dexter

Errol Flynn

Roger Moore

Moore is new double for swashbuckler Flynn and plays "soldier of fortune" roles which were Flynn's trademark.

Joan Crawford

Juliet Prowse

Hollywood moguls said to be grooming Juliet Prowse for Joan-type roles. Both got their starts as dancers.

Will Rogers

Bob Hope

Bob Hope resembles famed Will Rogers and like Rogers specializes in spicing his wit with home-spun philosophy.

A TRIBUTE TO NBC

The idea was to select from our mail, the top show on video. But our staff certainly had a difficult time deciding which show on television was most popular. While sorting out the large volume of responses, we noticed a strange thing . . . over 80% of your favorite programs were N.B.C. offerings. This occurrence was so overwhelming, that we could take only one action. Movie TV Secrets Yearbook is proud to announce that instead of selecting the best show of the year, we would like to honor the entire N.B.C. network for its excellent job in presenting worthwhile and entertaining viewing.

One of the outstanding qualities of this network is that it presents such a large scope of programs, and enables every age group and every type of viewing taste to enjoy its offerings. Let's take a look at some of NBC's achievements.

The whole family can enjoy watching Shirley Temple, Tab Hunter, Dinah Shore, Loretta Young, Barbara Stanwyck, Bachelor Father, Ernie Ford and Nanette Fabray. Western fans watch handsome cowboys fight for justice in Bonanza, Tall Man, Shotgun Slade, Wells Fargo, Wagon Train, Outlaws and Bat Masterson. Those who long for exciting thrillers can tune in to Alfred Hitchcock and The Third Man. Bill Cullen's The Price Is Right is just the thing for folks who enjoy a lively quiz show.

NBC can truly be proud of its fine record for presenting top shows to TV viewers, and we know the network will continue providing us with winners.

UNTOLD STORIES

Exclusive! Tales From Tinseltown

That'll Burn Your Ears. Who Are The Stars?

Fit the Photos Together And The Answer Will Be All Yours!

It was a terribly cold December night in Greenwich Village and the streets were empty, save some scattered papers being played with by the biting winds. The young actress hardly noticed the cold as she hurried up to an apartment where a famed drama coach waited ready to try her out for a big role in a new show he was involved in.

He answered her knock and she was nervous but happy to be in front of the huge fireplace and the recipient of the mug of hot coffee he handed her.

"This is a romantic lead," he said later. "I'll read you a few lines leading to the climax."

The young and beautiful actress began to blush furiously. The lines sounded like gutter talk spiced liberally with pornography. She was stunned.

Before she could move, he was upon her.

"Treat me nice, and you get the role, kid," he breathed noisily into her ear.

He forced her to the couch, attempting to tear her clothes off.

"No, no!" she cried, suddenly freeing herself and in one motion grabbing her coat and heading down the flight of stairs to the icy street. She straightened her clothes and walked out of the hall, vowing she wouldn't ever fall victim to any casting couches.

"Yes sir," she said audibly, "I'll make it on my talent as an actress." And she really did!

The young blonde girl was trying out for a screen test. Columbia's chief talent scout, Max Arnow, said: "Now, Marilyn, don't be frightened. Just do what we told you, okay?"

She nodded.

The cameras began to roll and the plump Marilyn leaned against a prop fireplace and pushed her chest outward as she whispered: "I want love. Give me some love," along with other equally inane mouthings.

They were trying out anyone that day. Rita Hayworth had just left in a huff and almost every thrilled girl on the lot, extras, one-line dialogue gals, etc., got to take a test, as possible replacements.

When screen chief Harry Cohn saw Marilyn he said: "She's got something, but not ability. She's fat. She mumbles and she ain't even got what Hayworth started out with."

The test was put on the shelf and gathered dust for a while and then Marilyn was tossed hurriedly into a quickie movie, by some lucky stroke of fate. The fan mail poured in and Cohn said: "I signed her to $125 a week contract, I didn't know why. Now I know."

It was the pudgy blonde's chassis that got to the audiences, Cohn was certain. So he decided to cut down on the curves just a bit and build a girl more to his liking. He had her teeth straightened and whitened and replaced missing one. He put her on a rigid diet and arranged an exercise schedule and a dramatic class. The word went out to publicity that no stills were to be shot until after Marilyn's metamorphosis was complete. He then arranged for her hair to be dyed and told her to adopt a certain color as her trademark. She picked lavender and saturated herself in it, from panties to stationery.

Then he gave her a new name, well, half a name. She kept part of her own monicker. From then on there was nowhere for this glamorous actress to go but up.

He got his big break in a television show as a killer. The program was so good it was finally made into a series. Critics said the kid was "the first new and offbeat actor since James Dean." There was no doubt about it, he played the role they gave him to the hilt and if it wasn't for him, there certainly would have been no series. However, when the show began, there, strangely enough, wasn't a part in it for him!

He was "killed off" and they couldn't very well bring him back in the same role, so they created one for him. It brought him fame and fortune. The fortune came after he fought with his studio for more money.

Then after many shows he found that the studio had created a Frankensteinian monster for him in the role. His acting ability was forgotten and his audience became 100% teenage. He was miserably unhappy. He wanted a chance to show he could act again, but he never got it. There was torment about him, a boy who went too far, too fast. He lost his own identity. Many people didn't even know his name, just the name of the character he portrayed so well. He allowed the most ridiculous fan stories to be printed about him. His one-time love affair with a ballet dancer was printed and reprinted until not a shred of privacy remained for him. He allowed stories of dubious taste to be used about his alcoholic father. Anything went, the dollars rolled in and he tried to forget the rut he was caught in. He grinned, postured, talked teenage and generally conducted himself like a talentless adolescent, all the time worrying about whether he would have a future. Even then his role was on the wane. Then he begged his studio to let him make a movie with his close buddy, Clint Walker. They consented and the film and the kid's performance was well received by fans and critics. He still wasn't happy. The part didn't give him an opportunity to show his acting skill. Now he won a new battle and will abandon the part that made him famous to share equal billing with the other three stars of the show. The kid may still make it! •
